M'GOORTY PUTS HOPE IN LAW'S WAR ON GANGS

Chief Justice Wants Citizens in Fight.

"The time has come when the people of Chicago must choose between the rule of the gangster and the rule of law." —JOHN P. McGOORTY, Chief Justice Criminal Court of Cook County.

BY JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT.

For three solid months, week in and week out, day in and day out, and on some days hour by hour, the mildest mannered man in the public life of Chicago has been impressing fundamentals upon the crime combating agencies of this community.

Talk he has done without raising his voice, without losing his temper, and without engendering those rancors which, by putting public officials at loggerheads, wreck well laid plans for the restoration of law in a lawless city.

Revives War on Crime.

The result is that John Patrick McGoorty, chief justice of the Criminal court of Cook county, has put new life into grand juries and given them a new sense of their responsibilities and opportunities.

He has also assembled various law enforcing agencies in numerous conferences which have not exploded in futile wrangling and recrimination but have given earnest heed to his grave presentation of dire facts and to his pleas for loyal coördination of effort.

In the present crisis Judge McGoorty's most important duty has been the monthly charge to each new grand jury. To each he has appealed with the utmost solemnity but in simple words, saying upon one occasion: "You are possessed of great power. I charge you to use it wisely and honestly, as patriots and free men."

A Juror's Impression.

The last five words he released slowly, accompanying them with a searching glance.

"Something," a juror remarked later, "in the judge's tone and look brought me face to face with my obligation as 'patriot and free man' so impressively that the words came back to me every time I entered the grand jury room."

Judge McGoorty is sixty-four years old. He has reached the elder statesman stage of benignity without lapsing into bland indolence. For half a century he has touched the practical side of life at many points. He had to make his own way in the world from the time when in his teens he became bookkeeper for a flour mill in Berlin, Wis. His father was John Peter McGoorty and his mother, Mary Gaffney McGoorty. They were Connaught people who emigrated to this country (Continued on page 27.)

twenty years ago.

Born in Ohio.

He was born in Conneaut, Ashtabula county, O., but was reared in Berlin. From keeping books for the flour mill he was promoted to a traveling salesmanship. When he was twenty years old he settled in Chicago as agent for the mill. But the law lured him and he went to night law school, graduating in 1891 as president of his class.

He was then twenty-six years old. At the age of thirty he was elected state assemblyman and was thrice reelected. In 1899 he was minority leader of the lower house and as such he fought the iniquitous Humphrey and Allen bills. The Legislative Voters' league declared him to be "a man of force and energy" and "one of the most valuable men in the assembly."

Elected Judge in 1911.

In 1904 he was an unsuccessful candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor and in 1911 he was elected judge of the Circuit court. His service on the bench, which has not been continuous, has comprised seven years.

These biographical details may not seem momentous, but they should be read by the reader because they prove that the judge's abounding benignity is not the product of any sheltered existence from the practicalities of life and politics. He does, indeed, exude benevolence; his gentle voice proves benevolence, and he is benevolent. But this suave and kindly outlook on life and mankind is coupled with no illusions about life and mankind and he feels that both require intelligent watching.

Of the machinations, the wiles, the impudence, and the insolence of politicians he has the exact knowledge gained from practical contacts with them—and only thus to be gained.

The subjecting of law enforcing agencies to political influence he con-

IRISH MARCH TO U. S. FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

O'Connor Stars in Rout of Trojans.

BY GEORGE SHAFFER.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 6.—Notre Dame's brilliant football warriors, who haven't taken defeat since 1928, this afternoon crossed up the football world by crushing the University of Southern California's greatest eleven by the amazing score of 27 to 0.

The Irish had come into the west with less prestige than their 18 previous straight victories should have gained them. Proud Californians knew that Notre Dame boasted three victories out of four games played with Southern California. All three of these were by one point margins, but you can't make a Southern Californian admit defeat on a one point margin.

Irish Were Underestimated.

So, we say, coast observers and the majority of the 90,000 spectators in the Los Angeles Coliseum this afternoon had scented a slaughter of the underestimated Ramblers by the team which, in piling up terrific scores against traditional adversaries, had won the reputation of being U. S. C.'s greatest scoring machine, a marvel at strategy and a juggernaut in all phases of football power.

To those who have followed Notre Dame exploits for two years it is needless to point out just now that Frank Carideo was brilliant at quarter back today, that Brill was a demon blocker, that Schwartz was a squirming, dashing, and plunging streak. It is unnecessary to point out that Metzger, Culver, Kurth, and the rest of the regular line were superb on offense and defense alike.

O'Connor Brightest of All.

But what you didn't expect, and the circumstance that has left the coast in a football stupor, is the fact that Bucky O'Connor, secretly converted from a second string half back to a first string full back just for today's game, perhaps was the brightest star of the contest. Bucky made the second touchdown of the game on an eighty yard run, and it was he who carried over the third touchdown, this one on a lateral pass from Schwartz, early in the third period.

If there is need for any further personality surprises after reflection on O'Connor's artistry it is recorded that Nick Lukats, Gary boy who recently graduately from the third string to the second string, was a whale of a first string left half during the time Marchy Schwartz wasn't working at the job. Nick tore off several long gains and capped his stellar work with the fourth and final Irish touchdown.

How Did Knute Do It?

O'Connor is a senior, and he ever has been faithful to his second string rôle. The way he blossomed forth today, therefore, was something more than dramatic. Here was a kid made a full back to succeed a Savoldi and a Mullins for one big game, the last of his collegiate career.

Folks don't know yet how Knute Rockne, the old fox, pulled the coup of getting Bucky ready to plug the one weak spot in the Irish battlefront. He didn't do it in the day time or on any practice field, camp followers claim. Sleuths now are trying to get the dope on where the midnight, moonlight drills were held.

O'Connor's average was almost 11 yards per down, and he carried the ball ten times without a failure. He was a whiz on defense as well—an inspired athlete every moment of the time he was engaged in singing his collegiate swan song. And what a swan song!

Trojans Are Outclassed.

Southern California didn't have a Japanese landlord's chance. The great team crumpled on offense and it crumpled on defense. And the big, strong boys who had been made so rough and ready by California's glorious sun not only were outclassed but they were out conditioned by the athletes who had journeyed from afar to acclimate themselves in less than two days of California climate.

If the score of 27 to 0 is not convincing enough, prune the major statistics. Notre Dame made sixteen first downs to Southern California's eight, and gained 423 yards to the Trojan's 148.

Schwartz, Caridee Show Tricks.

Whenever the Trojans sought to stiffen against the Irish running attack Schwartz and Caridee coolly cut loose a bag of tricks which included double and triple passes, long and short forwards, as well as short and long lateral tosses and double spin

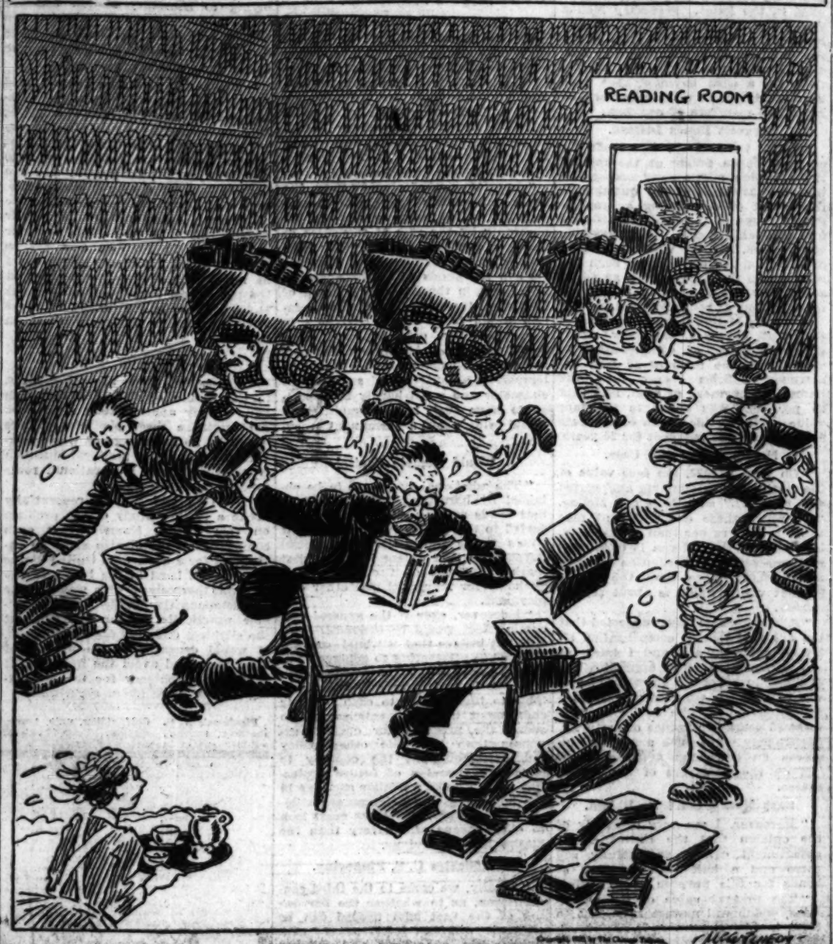
THE MAN WHO TRIED TO KEEP UP WITH THE NEW BOOKS



ROBBERS HERD 5 INTO VAULT IN MUNDELEIN BANK

Five bandits yesterday robbed the Mundelein State bank at Mundelein of $5,000 and escaped in a large sedan. They drove up to the institution, which is in Lake street, away from the business section, at 7 p. m., as it was being opened for Saturday night business.

The driver remained in the sedan and one man with a machine gun stationed himself on the sidewalk. A pair armed with sawed-off shotguns and one with a revolver entered. Inside were M. C. Mott, cashier; Leo Dorsler, clerk; Sam E. Worthen, teller, and two customers, Edward Brixen and Leo Tekampe of Mundelein.

These were backed into the vault, and the man with the revolver then scooped the $5,000 from a compartment in the safe. The three then returned to the car, their departure being covered by the machine gunner.

NAB BOY OF 12 IN STOLEN CAR WITH TWO ARMED PALS

In capturing three armed youths last night, the police discovered the youngest and smallest potential bandit, they believe, ever captured in Chicago. He is Albert Besta, 12 years old, 526 North Springfield avenue. He is three feet, six inches in height and weighs 62 pounds.

His companions were George Jessica, 19 years old, 2315 Flournoy street, and Thomas Manor, 16 years old, 2047 Flournoy street. They were riding in a car stolen Friday from Leo Loth, 6057 South Maplewood avenue. Jessica was wearing two guns, in shoulder holsters.

Big Ten O. K.'s Transfer of Charity Game

BY WILFRID SMITH.

Northwestern university's football team will play Notre Dame at Soldiers' field on Oct. 10 next year. Permission for the change in site from Notre Dame to Chicago was granted yesterday afternoon by the faculty committee of the Western conference in session at the University club.

This decision makes possible an immediate gift of $100,000 by Northwestern to Chicago's campaign against unemployment. President Walter Dill Scott's first question on arrival at the alumni football dinner last night was whether permission had been granted. He said the $100,000 check would be presented at once—probably Monday.

Reimbursed Next Year.

Northwestern will be reimbursed for this donation from the proceeds of the game next fall. The plan calls for all receipts in excess of the seating capacity of the Notre Dame stadium to be donated to charity.

Notre Dame's stadium seats approximately 50,000. Soldiers' field has a capacity of 115,000 paid admissions. If the Notre Dame-Northwestern game next fall is a sell out, the charity fund will benefit from approximately 65,000 admissions. One hundred thousand dollars will be advanced immediately by Northwestern. If the charity fund is greater than that sum, the additional moneys will be paid over next fall.

The Rev. Father Charles L. O'Donnell, president of Notre Dame university, previously had announced that Notre Dame was willing to shift the 1931 game to Soldiers' field. The south park commissioners also had offered the stadium gratis. The action of the conference faculty representatives yesterday completed the negotiations.

Big Ten Committee Statement.

The statement of the faculty committee follows:

"In announcing the adverse mail vote of the conference upon the Northwestern request to transfer the 1930 game between that university and Notre Dame, Chairman W. J. Moenkhaus pointed out that in his judgment the result was due not to any lack of appreciation of the worthiness of the object of the proposed move, but rather that a yielding in the case presented would lead to a flood of imminent requests for permissions for equally meritorious objectives but involving departures from regulations much more serious in their consequences.

Sets No Precedent.

"In granting the request for 1931 the conference wishes to make it unmistakably clear that it will not entertain applications for permission to extend the football playing season beyond the last Saturday before Thanksgiving, nor will it consent to increasing the number of permitted games. The rules governing these matters were adopted as a result of a conviction that college athletics must be kept within a certain relationship to the fundamental purposes of colleges, —namely, education. There has been no reason as the years have passed to question the soundness of this view. Moreover it should be noted that our athletic teams, whatever popular impression there may be to the contrary, are not aggregations of hired performers whose services are available when, where, and as we may choose.

Up to the Faculties.

"Whether or not a given institution shall or can contribute funds to charity or other worthy objects must be left to the judgment of the responsible officers of the institution concerned. It is pertinent to add in this connection that the apparently prevalent notion of overflowing athletic treasuries as to the vast majority of colleges and universities is wholly groundless. The expenditure of athletic funds, in conference universities, at least, is generally as carefully budgeted as are any of the other funds of the institution and expenditures for any given year are planned in advance on the basis of estimated income for that period."

The members of the conference faculty committee who voted permission for the Soldiers' field game follow:

Chairman C. C. Williams, Iowa; J. F. Pyre, Wisconsin; W. J. Moenkhaus, Indiana; A. C. Callen, Illinois; Thomas French, Ohio State; William Marshall, Purdue; James Paige, Minnesota; Frederic Woodward, Chicago; O. F. Long, Northwestern, and Ralph Aigler, Michigan.

40 Million Cut Clears Hoover Program Path

BY ARTHUR CRAWFORD.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Harmonious action on President Hoover's unemployment program was made more likely today.

A subcommittee of the house appropriations committee cut the proposed 150 million dollar emergency construction fund to 110 millions and restricted somewhat the broad authority given to the President.

The changes, which were apparently made acceptable to the administration by a promise to incorporate specific proposals for the expenditure of the remaining items totaling $40,000,000 in a deficiency bill or in the regular annual departmental bills if found justified on further study, brought the Democratic members of the subcommittee into line for the measure.

The revised bill will be reported from the full appropriations committee on Tuesday and given immediate consideration on the floor of the house.

Administration Seed Bill Approved.

Earlier today the house committee on agriculture voted to report favorably the administration bill for loans for seed, feed, fertilizer, and fuel for drought sufferers after increasing the total from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000. The committee, which was in control of the administration forces, rejected by a vote of 6 to 12 the Aswell bill, identical with the bill approved yesterday by the senate committee on agriculture, providing a $60,000,000 fund and extending its application to loans for food. Supporters of the Aswell bill will carry their fight to the floor of the house.

Meanwhile talk of a deficit of 350 millions or more in the present fiscal year as a result of proposed huge expenditures for unemployment and drought relief brought from Senator William E. Borah [Rep., Idaho] a suggestion for an increase in income taxes.

Borah's Tax Increase Plan.

Under the plan outlined by Senator Borah the normal individual income tax rates, which automatically return next year to 1½, 3, and 5 per cent, would be boosted to 3½, 5, and 7 per cent and the flat corporation tax from 12 to 14 per cent. Reduced rates in effect this year were one-half, 2, and 4 per cent on individual incomes, and 11 per cent on corporation earnings.

Instead of either retaining this year's rates, representing a one per cent cut on all normal brackets, or the higher rates provided by law, Senator Borah would add 3 per cent to each of this year's rates or 2 per cent to the rates as provided by law for next year.

Senator Borah opposed the reduction in income tax rates a year ago and with others of the radical group has favored higher rather than lower rates on the theory that with present exemptions income taxes apply chiefly to those well able to bear them.

Little Chance for Success.

His proposal brought expressions of opposition from Senator Reed Smoot [Rep., Utah], chairman of the senate finance committee, and Representative W. C. Hawley [Rep., Ore.], chairman of the house ways and means committee. Both asserted flatly there would be no increase in taxes.

Inasmuch as revenue measures cannot originate in the senate and inasmuch as Senator Borah would not even be able to offer his proposal as an amendment to another bill unless a revenue bill should be passed in the house it was not regarded seriously. The house ways and means committee will refuse to report any bill either increasing or decreasing taxes and no legislation on the subject is in prospect at this session.

Furthermore, the treasury plans to take care of any temporary deficit by drawing upon the balance in the general fund, which at the beginning of the present fiscal year was in excess of 300 millions, and also by an increase in temporary borrowings.

So long as congress holds appro-

Recovery Once Started Grows Like Snowball

When the market broke last year it was repeating history. Ten times before, American business has passed through the same sort of a crisis. A counterpart for that stirring affair in President Hoover's first year came in the administrations of Presidents Monroe, John Quincy Adams, Van Buren, Polk, Buchanan, Grant, Arthur, Cleveland, Roosevelt, add Wilson.

History has also had a way of repeating the events after a crisis. First has always come a depression. Depression has always been followed by revival. Revival has always been followed by full prosperity. And then, alas, a new crisis develops, with the whole thing over again.

A little depression like this one is old stuff. But so is the recovery, which has regularly started a year or so after the downward swing started. The President says we are near the end of the depression. So say the economists and the bankers. The recovery needs to be started. Once going it grows like a snowball. Getting recovery started, however, isn't something to be left to the other fellow. Every one with sustained income can help to get the period of revival on its way. To do that go to your stores at once and buy the same amount of goods that you usually do.

64 MYSTERIOUS 'FOG DEATHS' PUZZLE SCIENCE

Belgians Open Quiz; Bury Victims Today.

BY ANN SOMERS HOUSE.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ENGIS, Belgium, Dec. 6.—The gray terror which in the last two days has struck down 64 persons in this murky corner of Belgium, and left between 200 and 400 with an inexplicable malady, from which they may or may not recover, lifted today. But the cause of the mysterious "poison fog" which struck terror into this section of the Meuse valley remained a deep mystery.

Several investigations are under way, including a conference of Red Cross doctors, who have been unable to make a report for want of definite evidence, and an inquiry by a delegation of mines school professors.

Autopsy Order Rescinded.

Last night it was officially announced at Brussels and at Liege that autopsies on the victims would be held at once in order to determine the cause of all these mysterious deaths. Today Dr. Lacombe, the government's hygienic inspector at Liege, after spending the afternoon talking with local doctors and village officials, rescinded the order for autopsies and authorized the issuance of burial permits. He announced that the deaths were simply "due to fog and natural causes."

The funerals of the victims will take place here tomorrow—one collective service and then individual interments. The same order will be observed in the other villages.

Thus, science's hope of obtaining a clew to the malady appears to have been dissipated, and except for hypotheses formulated on the basis of hearsay information by scientists of two continents, the weird plague which spread death during a period of two days over an area of a few square miles probably will go down as an insoluble mystery.

People Speculate on Cause.

There is much speculation as to the reason for rescinding of the autopsy order. One theory among the people here is that the death fog might have been caused by a leakage in the army chemical plant, where new war gas is being experimented with. This is possible, but, considering what is known today about poison gases, it seems dubious.

Among other possible reasons is the belief that the deaths might have been caused by fumes from large zinc and fertilizer factories near here, and that if the truth ever got out about the leaks there would be a general exodus of 60,000 inhabitants from this section of the Meuse valley, making it impossible to secure help to run the factories.

People Blame Factories.

The general opinion of the inhabitants here is that the factories are to blame. Local doctors who watched the victims die, or who are now caring for them in homes or hospitals, declare that they are completely at sea and admit that the deaths might have been due to some unknown gas, factory fumes, or an unclassified epidemic.

One thing is certain: the great zinc works on the outskirts of Engis, one of the largest in Europe, which was officially stated last night to have been closed down for a month, is running full blast as THE TRIBUNE correspondent discovered during the course of a drive this afternoon, and the same is true of the fertilizer factory.

This country is obviously affected by fumes from the two factories. Under the heavy hoar frost the country looks particularly dismal, but I have been informed that even in the middle of summer the trees are scrawny, shrubs and flowers withered, and no grass is seen.

Farmers Abandon District.

Yearly the fields grow more sterile and the farmers have been moving out and abandoning the district to the factories. There has always been an unpleasant, acrid smell in the air, but the inhabitants have gotten used to it.

Today, at least in this town, the people have recovered from their terror, and except for a preternatural silence, it is impossible to realize that a catastrophe has occurred. Mingled with the grief over the deaths there is fierce resentment against the factories which the townspeople believe to have poisoned them.

No new deaths have occurred since last night, but it is impossible to tell yet whether the sick will ever fully recover. Ten in the hospital at Ougre, who last night seemed to be dying, now appear out of danger, but the doctors fear that their lungs have been partially eaten away. Many are confined to their homes in almost as serious a condition.

What Zinc Might Do.

Boston, Dec. 6.—(AP)—Dr. Reid Hunt of the Harvard medical school faculty saw a possible connection today between the Belgian epidemic and the presence of zinc foundries in the stricken area. Zinc, according to Dr. Hunt, often contains arsenic, which can become a volatile poison when it comes in contact with water. He said cases from such a compound escaping in a fog bound district might make the atmosphere deadly.

British Cattle Die Mysteriously.

GROSMONT, Yorkshire, England, Dec. 6.—[U. P.]—Health ministry officials were investigating tonight the unusual disease which caused the deaths of several head of cattle on the farm of J. Hodgson during the last few days of heavy fog. The officials said they believed the disease was due to germs in the air.

"The North sea breezes may have conveyed the germ here," one inspector said. "The cause of death of the cattle was not hoof and mouth disease, but appears to be something entirely new."

The herds affected were isolated.

England Promised Relief.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Dec. 6.—Immediate relief is promised from the fog, which is still hampering the movements of traffic in England.

Although cross channel service was resumed today, after a lapse of forty-eight hours, shipping is still moving with extreme caution on the Thames and in all the southern ports. A number of trains are also delayed.

The small cargo boats anchoring off London were virtually foodless. The Orient liner Orvieto spent her third day anchored off Tilbury, unable to approach the docks.

Air service from Croydon has been called off because the heavy blanket of fog has not lifted high enough for safe flying at a reasonable altitude.

THEORY OF POISON FOG DISCREDITED BY AEROLOGIST

Dr. E. Vernon Hill, aerologist, director of the Holland Institute of Thermology, and former chief of the sanitary bureau of the Chicago health department, yesterday discredited reports that a poison gas fog has caused nearly 100 deaths in Europe.

"I have a very definite view on the matter," Dr. Hill explained. "When air is saturated with moisture it is clear, but when air is supersaturated with a large amount of moisture it produces a fog particularly when the temperature is low. The dispatches say the mercury in Belgium, France, and England is about 28 degrees.

"When this fog is breathed into the lungs at a temperature as low as that it has a tendency to freeze lung tissue and bring about acute congestion. Persons susceptible to this supersaturated air would be stricken."

Prof. Julius Stieglitz of the chemistry department of the University of Chicago favored the theory of the release of buried war gasses by recent floods and said that the deaths could not be caused by influenze germs because this disease does not affect cattle, which are being killed along with human victims.

Other Chicago scientists pointed out that it was folly for them to attempt solution of a mystery which is baffling the best minds of Europe and added that only examinations of the bodies could reveal what caused the deaths.

BARE ATTEMPT TO KILL COSGRAVE, IRISH PRESIDENT

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

DUBLIN, Dec. 6.—An official statement issued by the ministry of defense today confirms reports of recent shootings in Dublin in which, it is alleged, President Cosgrave and Dr. Hayes, speaker of the Dail, were intended victims.

The first incident occurred on Nov. 10, when the president's escort car was fired on from behind a wall along Kimmage road. Six shots were fired. One struck the rear of the car. The only occupant of the car was the driver.

On the night of Nov. 23, the guard at Dr. Hayes' house in Brighton Square was making his rounds when he observed two suspicious looking men on the corner. He approached them to investigate and they opened fire, wounding him in the leg. He fired in return and it is believed that one of the men was hit. No arrests were made in either case.

40 MILLION CUT SMOOTHS PATH OF HOOVER PLAN

Emergency Bill to Get Right of Way.

priations within budget estimates the administration will not sponsor any plan for an increase in taxes. Senator James E. Watson [Rep., Ind.], majority leader of the senate, asserted that he had been advised to this effect by President Hoover.

Emergency Bill Provisions.

The 110 million dollars as provided for emergency construction by the bill unanimously approved by a subcommittee of the house appropriations committee includes $30,000,000 for advances to the states for highway construction, to be repaid by deductions from future federal contributions to the states, $22,500,000 to the army engineers for rivers and harbors improvements, $3,000,000 to the army engineers for flood control work, $3,000,000 to the department of agriculture for roads in national forests, and $1,500,000 to the department of the interior for roads in national parks.

The reduction in the total does not disturb the tentative allotments for river and harbor work and thus will not interfere with the program for the probable use of $1,500,000 from this fund for the Illinois waterway.

The $40,000,000 which was cut from the original fund recommended by President Hoover included $30,527,500 for military activities of the war department, such as housing and other construction for various army bureaus, $4,620,000 to the bureau of yards and docks of the navy department, $1,083,000 for the department of commerce for air navigation facilities, aids to navigation, construction of fishery stations and similar purposes, $170,000 to the coast guard and miscellaneous allotments to the departments of agriculture, interior and justice.

Deficiency Bill Hearings Soon.

Hearings on the first deficiency bill are to be commenced by the same subcommittee of the house appropriations committee shortly. These items, after a further study, will be appropriated for specifically in the deficiency bill or incorporated in annual supply bills later in the session, if held to be justified.

The bill as revised, instead of giving blanket authority to the President to make the allocations, specifically provides for the allotments totaling 110 millions as enumerated. It gives the President some latitude by providing for an interchange of money among the purposes specified if it is found that more or less can be used to advantage.

Revision of the bill along this line represented a partial victory for Representative Joseph W. Byrns [Dem., Tenn.], ranking minority member of the appropriations committee, who led the attack upon establishment of a precedent for conferring upon the President broad powers over expenditures of large sums of money in peace times.

Mellon Vetoes Plan to Give Veterans Bonus in Cash as Costly and Unwise

BY ARTHUR CRAWFORD.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—The Hoover administration today placed itself on record against the proposal for immediate payment of the three and a half billion dollars' worth of soldiers' bonus certificates now outstanding in cash as a means of aiding the unemployment situation.

Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon, in a letter to Senator A. H. Vandenberg [Rep., Mich.], asserted that the scheme would be "against the best interests of the veterans, unjustified as a matter of broad economic policy, and seriously detrimental to the public debt operations of the government."

Concurrence by President Hoover in Secretary Mellon's conclusions was implied in the letter. Secretary Mellon stated that his study of the situation had been made at the request of the President, who had been asked by Senator Vandenberg to consider suggestions for a cash payment that have been pouring in from veterans' organizations to members of congress.

Suggests Bonds Instead.

Senator Vandenberg, who made the correspondence public at the request of Mr. Mellon, sent a reply asking that the secretary reopen the question to the extent of considering a proposal for exchange of the bonus certificates for negotiable bonds. A transaction of this kind, Senator Vandenberg said, could be carried out without such disturbance to the bond market as might accompany the floating of more than three billions of bonds by the treasury.

Secretary Mellon in his letter pointed out that congress originally determined in favor of compensation to veterans in the form of 20 year endowment policies rather than the immediate payment of cash, and that 25 per cent was added to the face value of the certificates to compensate for deferring the payment for 20 years.

Mellon States His Case.

"On Dec. 1, 1930, the face value of the certificates outstanding aggregated $3,409,304,122," said Secretary Mellon. "To retire these certificates at face value in 1931 rather than at maturity, in so far as the veteran is concerned will represent the distribution of about $1,640,000,000 more than the actual present value, which is about $1,770,000,000.

"It has nowhere been suggested that the adjusted service compensation allowed is inadequate, and I know of no justification for approximately doubling in effect the distribution provided for in the adjusted service compensation act by the device of payment 15 years in advance of maturity, particularly when such a proposal involves an enormous additional burden on the taxpayers of the United States.

Says Money Can't Be Raised.

"Moreover, I am very definitely of the opinion that the United States government cannot successfully sell three and a half billion dollars of bonds for this purpose at this time.

"The present value of the certificates, which will mature from 1945 to 1948, is approximately $1,770,000,000. There is some argument in favor of giving to the veterans the option to cash their adjusted service certificates at the present time on a present value basis, but I seriously question whether the payment would constitute a real benefit to the veterans. As a group these men doubtless would constitute an approximate cross section of our male population. In view of this fact and of their present age and the period of years which has already afforded opportunity for adjustment to peacetime pursuits, they would not seem to be a class which, as such, is in particular need.

"Furthermore, the retirement at present of outstanding adjusted service certificates would automatically defeat the purpose which, after careful and extended deliberation, these certificates were devised to serve. Compensation was made in this form and not in a lump cash payment in order that the veteran might be given an investment the value of which would increase from year to year and be available for distribution at a time when presumably it would be most helpful.

Sees No Justification.

"I do not believe that the government would be justified in inviting these men to relinquish their compensation certificates, which are, by intention, equivalent to insurance policies. It is possible for the veterans now to borrow on their certificates when temporary emergency needs make that procedure necessary and the records show that many have taken advantage of this privilege.

"As to the second consideration, the effect on economic conditions, the government would have to finance the payments by the sale of securities in the open market, and it is clear that, insofar as the retirements would place cash in the hands of the beneficiaries and result in the current spending of that cash, the net effect of the operation would be to divert savings into purchases for consumption. This would unquestionably have a stimulating effect on business, but it would be temporary stimulation of an artificial character and could hardly be expected to have such lasting qualities as would bring about a permanent recovery.

Would Deplete Capital.

"The additional funds are to be obtained by borrowing. To the extent that funds seeking investment are diverted to the purchase of government bonds to be issued for this special purpose, to that extent is the capital market depleted of funds otherwise available for industrial and other employment.

"Moreover, even if the general economic effect would be beneficial—and I do not believe that it would—are we justified in attempting to achieve such a result at the expense of the veterans? Is it any more sound or equitable to invite them to cash in their endowment insurance policies and to spend the proceeds for current expenses than to invite other policy holders throughout the country to forego the benefits of future protection and to make a similar sacrifice in the hope of giving a temporary stimulus to business? Business must look to other means of recovery than the dissipation of savings.

Complicates U. S. Financing.

"Finally, we come to the third consideration, as to whether the borrowing of the vast sum needed can be effected without interference with public debt operations and without greatly increased interest costs on the public debt. My opinion is that it cannot.

"In March, 1931, the treasury is faced with public maturities in excess of $1,100,000,000, calling for a large refunding operation. While the market for government securities is at present good, we cannot take it for granted that it has a capacity to take an indefinite amount of these securities. It will be a sufficient task to float an issue or issues already planned, without an additional one, and putting in additional issues will undoubtedly result in a higher cost of credit to the government.

"Moreover, the day is not distant when many billions of dollars of bonds bearing a 4¼ interest rate become callable. A large increase in the public debt at this time, whether in the form of short term paper or even long term bonds, must necessarily adversely affect the extremely important refunding operations that must then be undertaken."

Vandenberg's Reply.

Senator Vandenberg in a letter replying to Secretary Mellon asserted that, while he granted the soundness of his argument from an academic standpoint, "we dare not be academic in the face of stark reality."

"The facts, as I see them," said Senator Vandenberg, "are: [1] Thousands of veterans are in dire distress; they have hypothecated their compensation certificates to the limit, and at higher interest rates than ought to attach to such transactions, and are in prospect of losing their equity; they feel justly entitled to the same emergency consideration from their government that they gave to their government in 1917-'18; and [2] in abstract economic theory there could be no greater economic stimulant in the mass than the release of perhaps $1,000 apiece in the hands of some 3,000,000 persons in every state in the union.

Suggests "Way Around."

"Meanwhile, there are other facts, in the nature of obstacles, to which your survey appropriately refers. Do not minimize these obstacles. There would be no advantage of wisdom in ignoring them. The practical question is whether there is a rational route around them.

"To that end may I respectfully invite a further study of the problem on this theory; Namely, that cash compensation certificates shall be exchanged for a 3 per cent United States government bond in the hands of the veterans themselves. This would make the compensation immediately negotiable practically at par and without the slightest difficulty for any veteran. It would decentralize the process of liquidation and avoid the necessity of vast new machinery for the marketing of new government securities."

COLLEGES MAP CAMPAIGN FOR $200,000,000

Liberal Arts Group Fights Overspecialization.

BY THE REV. JOHN EVANS.

Plans looking toward the creation of a $200,000,000 fund for American liberal arts colleges were promoted yesterday at a meeting of a committee of fifteen, representing the liberal arts college movement which was recently organized. The committee met at the Edgewater Beach hotel under the chairmanship of President Albert N. Ward of Western Maryland college.

President H. J. Burghstahler of Cornell college, Mount Vernon, Ia., a member of the committee and a director of the new association, outlined the program of the movement. He declared the time has come when something more than a bread and butter education must mark the American college bred man. The movement, he said, had almost a spontaneous origin in a little room in Washington, D. C., about a year ago, when a small group of educators revealed their attitude toward the American overemphasis on specialized technical education.

Plan Campaign for Plan.

"The purpose of the movement," Dr. Burghstahler said, "is to promote liberal arts studies. We shall undertake a vast advertising campaign which shall urge American youth to undertake such college work as will make them well rounded citizens. Too frequently students are graduated with a lopsided education. They know one thing pretty well, but know little or nothing about anything else."

The liberal arts college movement now has 200 member colleges throughout the country. The leaders propose a general membership in a nation-wide association of 2,000 educators and others interested in advancement of the colleges. The $200,000,000 fund will be raised in a great drive in which all member colleges will co operate.

Dr. Burghstahler praised the new plan recently begun at the University of Chicago in which fixed courses of definite lengths are abolished. He said Cornell college inaugurated a similar plan, adapted to the small liberal arts college, a year ago.

Stresses Cultural Side.

"A college should not feel its only duty is toward a man's head," said Dr. Burghstahler. "There are cultural values which should be recognized. The student should have an extra curricular training which should help him in his social and moral relationship. Dr. Hamilton Holt recently said that the great difference between American colleges and universities and those of Europe is that over here we teach the student to remember. Over there students are taught to think."

Dr. Burghstahler said of Cornell's program: "We have developed courses of study based on five fields of concentration which cover the whole field of knowledge. Every student at Cornell college must take at least eight hours in each field. These fields are social sciences, natural sciences, fine arts, language and literature and philosophy and religion."

POLICE SEIZE 2,000 GALLON STILL; TRAP

Capt. John Prendergast of South State street police yesterday a raid on a 2,000 gallon alcohol in an old four story building at South Wabash avenue, where prisoners, Michael Verdi, 709 De Koven street, and Leo Henry, 814 Damen avenue, were arrested.

The still, one of the few of its ever seized in Chicago, had two foot columns, each 36 inches in ameter. It was connected with two 750 gallon vats, all full of mash. The equipment, valued at $50,000, appears to have been installed recently.

Verdi and Henry ran upstairs when the police arrived and climbed out on the roof of the building, where they were captured. They were turned over to prohibition agents, together with the still.

CALF-PATH

a not-too-serious analogy

Speaking of wasteful methods of doing business, reminds us of Sam Foss's famed n poem, "The Calf-Path." A few selected lines explain what we mean.

One day, through a primeval wood,
A calf walked home as good calves should;
And left a trail all bent askew,
A crooked trail as all calves do.

And from that day, o'er hill and glade,
Through those old woods a path was made;
And many men wound in and out,
And dodged, and turned, and bent about
And uttered words of righteous wrath
Because 'twas such a crooked path.

The years passed on in swiftness fleet,
The path became a village street;
And this, before men were aware,
A city's crowded thoroughfare;
And men two centuries and a half
Trod in the footsteps of that calf.

A hundred thousand men were led
By one calf near three centuries dead.
For thus such reverence is lent
To well-established precedent.

Excerpts from The Calf-Path by Sam. W. Foss

BANK ROBBERS TERRORIZE 31; GET $60,000

Machine Gun Menaces Throng at Clearing.

Five bandits raided the State Bank of Clearing, 5601 West 63rd street yesterday morning and escaped with $58,818.74 after terrorizing eleven employés and twenty patrons. The robbery was skillfully planned, the bandits making their getaway in less than seven minutes after their entrance, without firing a shot.

The money was taken from one of the safety deposit boxes and a concealed safe in the bank vault and from paying and receiving cages. The bandits missed $60,000 in another deposit box. A total of $120,000 had been delivered to the bank shortly after it opened to cash pay rolls in the industrial district.

From the method of the robbery police concluded that the bandits had an accomplice in the bank either in an employé or former employé who knew the routine of handling the pay roll money. Witnesses identified a bureau of identification picture of Tony Anruska, minor hoodlum, who is being sought.

Machine Gun Cows Guard.

At 10:30 the bandits drew up to the bank in a blue sedan with yellow wire wheels. One bandit remained at the wheel of the running car as the other four entered. Inside the bank door was Patrick Blair, guard at the bank for two years and an employé of the Turner-Hillock detective agency.

The leader of the bandits, who carried a submachine gun and was masked with a pillow slip, jammed the weapon into the pit of Blair's stomach and ordered him against the wall. The other three robbers deployed and forced the employés and patrons to line up with Blair.

Mrs. Gertrude Camphouse, 23 years old, 5607 West 52d street, a bookkeeper, fainted. As she slumped to the floor the bandits waved those who moved to aid her back to the wall. The leader pointed the submachine gun at Lambert Bere, vice president and cashier.

"Open the vault or——" said the bandit.

Open Secret Safe in Vault.

One of the bandits accompanied Bere into the vault under instructions of the leader to have box 305 opened. The box contained $30,000 in bills. The bandit placed these in his pocket and led Bere out.

"Did you get the dough in the safe?" the leader asked the bandit.

"No," was the reply.

"Take him back and make him open the safe," the leader ordered. "It's behind the mirror."

Bere was forced to loose the secret catch on the mirror and open the safe. The bandit took about $20,000 from the safe. Below the open deposit box was another containing $60,000, Henry P. Isham, president of the bank, said later.

At this point Dr. Roger W. Poborsky, physician at 5548 West 65th street, appeared at the door to make a deposit. One of the two bandits standing on guard staggered toward the doorway in imitation of a drunken man. He brushed against the doctor as the latter entered the bank. The bandit pushed his revolver into the doctor and forced him to the floor.

Drive Crowd Into Basement.

The bandits herded the employés and customers into the basement of the bank after ordering them to their feet. The leader warned them not to come up, "or we'll come back and shoot your ears off."

The bandits fled. Several of the more venturesome employés watched the automobile go south in Central avenue and turn west on 65th street. The pillow slip worn by the leader was found on the bank floor. The Chicago Lawn police were notified. Capt. Dan Lynch and Lieut. George Barker began an investigation. Identification marks were torn from the pillow slip and a search failed to reveal fingerprints.

Among the employés were Louise Marie Fellon, 21 years old; Florence Williamson, 19 years old; Leona Bair, 18 years old; Henrietta Georges, 19 years old; W. L. Duerr, assistant cashier; John Camphouse of the real estate department; Thomas Sessl, Alvin Tuk and Richard Hurlock.

Bankers Offer Rewards.

The Chicago and Cook County Bankers' association announced last night through E. N. Baty, executive secretary, a reward of $2,500 for each of the bandits taken dead or $1,000 if captured alive. This is the fixed reward of the association set in 1926. They are to be paid on conviction.

"The rewards were voted following a series of bank robberies in 1925 and 1924," Mr. Baty said. "Since they were posted we have had only two robberies in the city in four years, including the Clearing holdup. Because of the unemployment condition we fear a possibility of an increase in bank holdups and stress the rewards offered."

The association is to present $5,000 to Acting Commissioner of Police Alcock Wednesday for distribution to the policemen who captured the five Negroes who participated in the robbery of the Franklin Trust and Savings bank two years ago. Three of the robbers have been executed for the murder of the bank's watchman and two others were sentenced to prison.

Watseka, Ill., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Two men who have swaggeringly posed here as Capone gangsters since January, and who for almost a year bluffed fearful citizens of this town with their impersonations, were arrested by Watseka authorities today as plain stickup men.

In custody, the prisoners, William C. Clifford, 22 years old, and J. Arvi Walker, 33, quickly shed their masquerade and confessed four bank holdups, the loot totaling $20,000, in Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin. They waived extradition and were taken under guard to Glen Haven, Wis., to face robbery charges for their latest crime.

The robbers confessed that they had robbed banks at Glen Haven, Gardner, Ill., Strawberry Point, Ia., and Garnavillo, Ia. They named Harry Nusbaum, who was killed in an auto accident two months ago, as their accomplice.

BAILIFF WHO AIDED ROBBER SEIZED BY U. S.

Joseph Spinello, alias Rale, former deputy bailiff of the Municipal court, who served a jail term for manipulating the release of James Johns, an armed robber, was arrested by department of justice agents yesterday on charges of violating the Mann act.

Mrs. Pauline Corrigan Spinello, 20 years old, who was held as a material witness, told the federal agents that Spinello took her to New Orleans and forced her to remain three days in a hotel. She escaped and returned to Chicago, but Spinello followed and forced her with a gun to marry him, she charged. The young woman had not obtained a divorce from her first husband.

Shortly after his indictment two years ago in connection with the release of a prisoner in his custody, Spinello was accused of kidnaping Dorothy Howard, 2864 Lincoln avenue, and holding her a prisoner in a hotel for two days.

CONVICT BELAK OF KILLING HIS DIVORCED WIFE

Jurors Fix Penalty at 14 Years in Prison.

Andrew Belak, 48 years old, was convicted by a Criminal court jury last night in his second trial for the murder of his divorced wife, Mary, who was shot last March.

The verdict, returned before Judge E. I. Frankhauser, fixed the penalty at fourteen years in prison, the minimum for murder under Illinois law. The convicted slayer received the verdict unemotionally.

Children Divided at Trial.

Near him sat two daughters, Mrs. Jean Pallke and Mrs. Irene Ligman, who had testified in his behalf. They had also appeared for him at his first trial which resulted in a jury disagreement last summer.

Belak's conviction was based mainly on evidence given by other children. Harriet, 10 years old, testified that her father had shot her mother during a quarrel. It was Harriet, principally, who counteracted the defense of her father that a bootlegger, named yesterday in court as George Lombardo, had killed Mrs. Belak.

Belak's Story Challenged.

Belak's story was that the alleged bootlegger, previously identified only as George, had not only shot Mrs. Belak but had also wounded him. He exhibited a wrist wound to substantiate his story.

The state, however, asserted that Belak killed his ex-wife because he found her drinking with the mysterious George, and then shot himself to frame a defense. Harriet supported this contention and also charged her father with trying to force her to blame the killing on a bootlegger.

BATTLE 8 DAYS TO SAVE 2 WOMEN IN GRIP OF BRIGANDS

PEIPING, China, Dec. 6.—[U. P.]—The story of two foreign women, one an American and one a British nurse, who were captives of a Chinese bandit gang, was related today by Miss E. Gomersal, the nurse. She and Mrs. J. D. Hayward of Seattle were captured while Mrs. Hayward was en route to Peiping from the interior for a serious operation, the nurse said. Their trip covered 40 days filled with thrilling experiences on river rafts, ox carts and in a camel caravan.

"We were carrying valuable furs and gold in our party, accompanied by Mongol guards," she said. "We were on foot at the time the brigands, riding horses, attacked us. The bandits grabbed our sleeves and dragged us from the party to hold us for ransom.

"There was a pitched battle and our Mongol guards retreated. Everybody was robbed, but the Mongols later returned to the battle and rescued us. The fighting continued for eight days, during which time we were in the mountains in freezing weather with the bandits encircling our camp."

PROPOSE POLICE JURY REMAIN ON JOB FOR MONTHS

Chamberlin Cites Legal Backing for Plan.

A proposal that the special grand jury to be summoned in January to investigate every police department in Cook county continue its work from term to term until its task is completed was made yesterday to Chief Justice John P. McGoorty of the Criminal court by Henry Barrett Chamberlin, operating director of the Chicago Crime commission. The proposal was accompanied by an extensive legal argument on extending the life of the special grand jury.

The report to Chief Justice McGoorty stresses the necessity of conducting the inquiry in a manner to convince the public of its sincerity, to do justice to the police departments and to be constructive. Such an inquiry cannot be accomplished in one term of court, Mr. Chamberlin said.

Special Jury Needed.

The police inquiry has been conducted in part by the past three grand juries in addition to their regular routine. Each of these had an average of 457 cases to dispose of during the month term. Because of the heavy pressure of routine work a regular grand jury cannot complete even a superficial investigation within its term of service, the report states.

The grand jury was adopted in the first Illinois constitution as a heritage from the old English common law. A Supreme court decision holds that an order allowing a regular grand jury to continue from term to term was erroneous. The opinion stated that although the question of legality of the grand jury in question could not be raised on a writ of error, an accused person could raise the question through a challenge to the array or motion to quash the indictment returned beyond the regular term.

Common law provided for the calling of special grand juries, the report points out. These, however, are limited to investigation of cases of offenses committed after the regular grand jury had been discharged. The common law in this respect has been changed by statute authorizing a special venire when, in the opinion of the court, public justice required such action.

Two Function at Same Time.

The report states that the statute revised the common law so as to permit a special grand jury to function at the same time with a regular grand jury. Under common law the special grand jury could not function beyond the court term.

"The legal conclusion that a special grand jury authorized by statute in Illinois may continue in session until an inquisition begun by it is completed violates no rule of statutory interpretation," Mr. Chamberlin said. "It will be argued that when a statute which is evidently intended to make an innovation is not to be construed as altering the common law further than the language of the statute clearly and necessarily requires, and that, therefore, the common law rule limiting the existence of the special grand jury to the term in which it is impaneled has not been abrogated by the statute.

May Continue for Months.

"In answer to this it may be stated that a statute will be deemed to abrogate the common law where its provisions are inconsistent with and repugnant to the common law and a survival of the common law would, in effect, deprive the statute of its efficiency and render its provisions nugatory. In this state, from decisions and law, a special grand jury may continue from term to term until it has completed its inquisitions and has been discharged by the court."

The question of the short life of a grand jury has been frequently raised in the Criminal court. In their final reports many regular and special grand juries have complained of the lack of time in which to conduct a thorough investigation in suggesting that the next grand jury carry on.

Prosecutors have had difficulty in pushing an overlapping investigation because of the necessity of going over the same ground with the succeeding venire, so that the succeeding body wastes valuable time in rehearing old evidence. A ruling supporting the proposal of Mr. Chamberlin would be a valuable aid in warfare against crime, lawyers and judges agreed.

BANK CASHIER SLAIN BY ROBBER WHO GETS AWAY, TAKING $1,000

Pittsburgh, Pa., Dec. 6.—(AP)—A cashier in a suburban bank was shot and killed today by a robber who escaped with $1,000. The holdup was the third in the district in 24 hours.

Police of the tri-state district tonight were seeking the bandit who fired on the cashier, Charles N. McFarland, 38, of the Allegheny Valley Trust company at Verona.

A well dressed man armed with a revolver entered the bank, walked into the cashier's cage, and told McFarland to "Stick 'em up; I mean it."

McFarland, other employés said turned around and asked: "What do you mean?"

"I'll show you what I mean," the man with the gun answered, and shot the cashier, who died instantly.

The bandit took all the bills in sight and fled. He first leaped to the running board of a passing automobile, rode a short distance, then jumped off and boarded the machine of a grocery man. The driver was ordered to take the bandit to Pittsburgh, but told the man to take the car himself.

The delivery man abandoned the machine and the killer drove away.

GIRL, 19, TELLS OF KIDNAP RIDE WITH ROBBERS

Sister, 16, Foils Holdup of Indiana Bank.

Helen Hamilton, 19 years old, was taken back to her home in Stockwell, Ind., yesterday afternoon after a wild night of adventure as the hostage of a gang of bandits who had planned to rob the bank headed by her father.

The girl was not molested by her kidnapers, who drove her to Chicago, instructed her how to reach a police station, and gave her carfare. She was not frightened by the exciting events of the night and told her story to the Chicago police with intermittent giggles at the "thrill" of it all.

Oscar Hamilton, president of the Stockwell bank, greeted his daughter at the detective bureau and joined with her in telling all he knew of the kidnaping and frustrated robbery. Elza Leopard, 22 years old, Helen's fiancé, also came to Chicago.

How the bank robbery was foiled by the daring and courage of a younger daughter, Mary, 16 years old, and details of the kidnaping were related by father and daughter.

Shortly before 10 o'clock Friday night a man appeared at the Hamilton home and asked to see Mr. Hamilton.

Stranger Draws Gun.

"He said his name was Bishop and told a rambling story of hard times and unemployment," the banker said "Suddenly he pulled out a gun and said he was going to rob my bank. Then he called to a second man, who was masked, and they tied my wife and me to chairs. It was at th's time that Helen and Elza came in from a movie. They, too, were tied up."

Meanwhile the 16 year old daughter, Mary, upstairs heard the noise downstairs and, listening, gathered that her parents were being held up. She slipped on a dress and climbed out a window onto a trellis, which broke as she was descending and tumbled her to the ground. She was not hurt and ran barefoot to warn the nearest neighbors a block away.

These neighbors took Mary with them in an automobile to Lafayette, twelve miles away, and notified the police and sheriff.

The robbers heard the noise of the trellis breaking, according to Mr. Hamilton.

"The one called Bishop went upstairs," the banker said. "He noticed the open window and came down frightened. They untied Helen, told me they were going to take her so I wouldn't tell anybody, and that they would be back for the money Monday. A few minutes after they drove away the police from Lafayette arrived."

Girl Tells of Ride.

Helen took up the story, telling of the ride to Chicago.

"There were two automobiles," she said. "The two men called each other 'Butch' and 'Smitty.' They put me in a small sedan. The other car was a Packard and there was one man in it. He drove off one way and we took the road to Chicago.

"They didn't bother me much. The one called Smitty kissed me once or twice but didn't harm me any other way. We stopped once at a filling station for gas and again for cigarets.

"Why didn't you give some sign to people at these stops that you were being kidnaped?" she was asked.

"I was afraid," she replied. "They told me they'd shoot me sure if I screamed or did anything like that.

"They bragged most of the time about what great robbers they were. They said they'd robbed the Frankfort, Ind., bank of $67,000. But I don't think they were so much. They talked big, but I think they were amateurs."

When the trio arrived in Chicago they drove to the north side on Clark street. The two men gave the girl 15 cents and told her to take a Clark street car south and get off at Chicago avenue where she would find a police station.

ALL OF COUNTY'S STORES TO USE CERTIFICATE PLAN

Other Cities May Adopt Trade Boosting Idea.

The merchandise certificate plan designed to stimulate business by encouraging buying was expanded yesterday with a view to including every merchant in Cook county. Jacob M. Loeb, chairman of the certificate committee, announced that the plan, originally framed to operate only in a few loop stores, would be made country-wide.

As first drafted the plan was intended to encourage employers and individuals to give certificates instead of bonuses and gifts of money, the certificates to be redeemable in merchandise at a number of selected loop stores. When complaints were received from neighborhood business men that this plan was discriminatory, Mr. Loeb and his committee announced that the paper would be used for purchases in all outlying shops and stores in the county as well as those in the loop.

The certificates are now being printed and will be on sale Tuesday at the headquarters of the committee, 1 North La Salle street. On that date an educational campaign will be started through newspapers, radio, and churches in support of the movement.

Other Cities May Follow.

Indications were yesterday that Mr. Loeb's plan for improving business may become nation-wide. He stated that he had received inquiries from a number of eastern cities asking for details of the plan. Among the cities considering the adoption of the idea is Boston. A similar effort is being made by the National Association of Retail Clothiers, which is circularizing its members throughout the country.

"There are 22,000 merchants in Cook county outside of Chicago and most of these will be benefited," Mr. Loeb said. "At the bottom of this business depression is the fear of buying. But once buying is started it will continue and increase in volume until the gloom is banished. We feel confident that our plan will be the first step in that direction.

"Big Stores Hardest Hit."

"The big fellows on State street are to be commended for their generosity in this plan. The big stores have been hardest hit by the depression because of their tremendous overhead, yet they are glad to have the benefits of the gift certificate plan extended to the smaller fellows in the outlying regions who have been less badly affected, because they have been able to curtail expenses."

Col. Robert Isham Randolph, president of the Chicago Association of Commerce, said yesterday that he was certain that the certificate plan will result in a general stimulation of business.

BLAZE TIES UP LOOP TRAFFIC.

11 APPLICANTS TO EACH NAVY JOB, ADMIRAL SAYS

The American navy now has eleven applicants for every job to be filled, enabling it to select the best types of men in its history, Rear Admiral Richard Henry Leigh, commander of the Pacific battle fleet, revealed yesterday on his arrival in Chicago from San Pedro, Cal.

Admiral Leigh, who saw service in the Spanish-American war, the Boxer rebellion, and the world war, contrasted the present situation with the days of '98, when, he said, it was necessary to accept recruits who would not have a chance of passing the tests today.

The unemployment situation, he said, appears to be partly responsible for the large number of applicants. A year ago one out of each eight applicants was accepted. Admiral Leigh is en route to Washington for a 10 day conference.

POMPEII, Italy, Dec. 6.—(AP)—Spurred on by discovery of a fortune in ancient Roman gold objects buried for nearly 18 centuries under the lava of old Vesuvius, archaeologists today pushed on to additional finds.

One of them was a polychromatic statue of Apollo and another was a fresco of surpasisng beauty. Both of them were in the same ancient house at No. 4 Via Abondanza, hidden since A. D. 79, when Vesuvius destroyed this ancient city. A crew under the direction of Prof. Mairui brought the porch and peristyle of the house into light today. The objects recovered have been taken to the National museum at Naples.

POLICE CAPTAIN DENIES BEING QUIZZED BY U. S.

Capt. Albert Christensen, recently placed in charge of the missing persons bureau of the police department, yesterday was reported to have been questioned by revenue agents in the federal government's general investigation of the income tax affairs of police captains.

Federal investigators refused to divulge any information as to the reported questioning of Christensen and he denied that he had been interviewed. So far Capt. Patrick Harding of the Rogers Park station is the only police officer reported to have been questioned who confirmed the report.

It was learned yesterday that not only police captains are to be investigated by the government with respect to their income taxes but that other police officials, including several lieutenants and some former captains, are under inquiry. The federal investigation, it was reported, is just getting under way and several months will be required to complete it.

YULETIDE NEAR; IT'S TIME TO BE A GOOD FELLOW

More Contributions Are Received for Fund.

The week after next is Christmas, so there isn't much time left to enlist with the Good Fellows before the holiday. There is a coupon in a nearby column with which you can either pledge yourself to deliver a holiday meal and some toys for children to some poor home on Christmas Eve or you can join the Good Fellows who are providing necessities to destitute families until they can become self-supporting again.

Yesterday's mail at the Good Fellow headquarters included a $100 check from the Pure Milk association to be spent for milk for destitute families. W. C. McQueen of Elgin, president of the association, is urging the 19,000 farmer members of the organization to send contributions directly to the Good Fellows, labeling these donations to be spent for milk for the poor.

Girl Scouts Send Check.

There were 21 other donations during the day, totaling $917. The Girl Scouts of Anshe Emeth temple mailed $2.50.

The boys and girls of the sixth grade at the Gorton school, Lake Forest, sent $5 to help the family of "some ex-soldier who is out of employment and who has children."

In the Municipal court of Judge Edgar Jonas, the police presented $13 that had been seized in a raid on a dice game. The defendants denied the money was theirs. Some hungry and cold family will get the $13 through the Good Fellow fund.

Social Affairs Help.

Midwinter social activities are raising money for the Good Fellow family relief work. The society section of today's TRIBUNE tells of some affairs scheduled for the near future. Last night, the Iota Sigma Phi was enjoying a bridge party at the Bismarck hotel, proceeds for the Good Fellow fund. In the afternoon, a committee of women employés of Williams & Cunnyngham Advertising agency held a Good Fellow benefit party in the Congress hotel. Miss Marjorie Maxwell of the Chicago Civic opera and a niece of Lloyd Maxwell, president of the advertising agency, sang.

DUCE TO PRESENT 1930 GRAIN BATTLE REWARDS TODAY

ROME, Dec. 6.—(AP)—Premier Mussolini in his dual capacity of head of the government and farmer of Forli province will tomorrow make many an honest rustic's heart proud when he hands out the prizes won in the 1930 "grain battle" by the wheat growers of Italy.

This nation-wide contest has proved immensely successful in stimulating wheat production all over the kingdom, lightening Italy's imports considerably and improving her trade balance.

The Italians, as is well known, are a nation of bread eaters and consumers of wheat-containing macaroni and spaghetti, and while they do not yet produce enough for their own needs Premier Mussolini hopes that goal will be reached within a few years through reclamation of marsh and desert lands, notably in the south.

IT'S THE LAWYER WHO PAYS—AND NEEDY BENEFIT

Chief Justice Harry A. Lewis of the Superior court outguessed Attorney Nathan Einhorn yesterday and as a result the attorney contributed $100 to charity. The attorney appeared before the judge on Wednesday to obtain a writ of ne exeat to restrain a husband from leaving the city pending settlement of a divorce suit.

"You don't need a writ," the judge told the attorney. "He will come into court, all right. If he doesn't I'll pay $100 to charity—if he does you pay."

When Attorney Einhorn arrived at the county building yesterday he found the husband, Herman Milstein, a salesman, waiting for court to open. Milstein is being sued for divorce by Mrs. Hannah Milstein, 6154 South Park avenue, on grounds of desertion.

PICTURE OF FAMOUS CIVIL WAR BAND COMES OUT OF PAST

(Picture in Rotogravure Section.)

An interesting photograph out of the past has been produced from original daguerreotypes of the members of the band of the civil war 1st brigade, 3d division, 15th army corps, known as "Sherman's band," which accompanied the expedition on the historic march to the sea.

The daguerreotypes together with the complete library of music played by this band are the property of Sergt. Faust of Chicago, son of John Mortimer Faust, who was director of the original band.

Residents of Green county, Wis., knew this band before the civil war. It then gave occasional concerts at the old Manley house at Brodhead. When war was declared the musicians enlisted as a unit. So great was the comradship existing among the players that each pay day they pooled their money and divided it equally so that the cymbal player drew as much as the director. Serving one term the whole band reënlisted and at the close of the war was mustered out as a unit, returned to the home town and became famous as the Brodhead Silver Cornet band. As such it remained in existence several years after the war, giving concerts every Saturday afternoon in the public square directly opposite the old Manley house. Mr. Faust, the director, went to Dakota later and organized the first band at Yankton and Elk Point, long before railroads had penetrated into that part of the country.

A band in the early days was "a band." Each instrument was of the straight back variety, the horn bell not curving as do today's instruments. The bass horn player carried a horn some eight feet in height.

Auxiliary to Give Vets 3,000 Pairs of Slippers

Three thousand pairs of slippers, costing $7,000, will be given to inmates of the eight veterans' hospitals in the Chicago area between now and Christmas by the Cook County council of the American Legion auxiliary. The annual gift of slippers, greatly enlarged this year, was authorized yesterday at the quarterly board meeting at the Chicago Woman's club. New officers were elected as follows: Mrs. Ruth Roger, president; Mrs. Marcia Laver, first vice president; Mrs. Ruth Lange, second vice president; Mrs. Ann Lindemann, treasurer; Mrs. De Lacy, chaplain; Mrs. H. T. Boss, historian, and Mrs. Josephine Macauley, sergeant at arms.

GERMANY BEATS MOVES TO CRUSH FINANCE DECREE

Motion to Repeal Law Is Beaten by 38 Votes.

BY SIGRID SCHULTZ.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BERLIN, Dec. 6.—The Bruening government defeated the combined attack of the Fascists, Communists, and Nationalists four times in the reichstag today. As the smoke cleared away the figure of Chancellor Bruening still stood at the helm.

First the government defeated a motion to revoke the chancellor's decree of drastic financial reforms by 38 votes. It crushed a motion of nonconfidence by 36 votes, and then forced the reichstag to table a motion of confidence, proposed by "ironic" Nationalists, by 65 votes. The government wound up the day by trouncing a Communist proposal demanding revocation of the emergency decree in force since last June by 72 votes.

Black Bread Is Back.

One of the immediate results of the passing of the financial reform decrees will be felt on Monday, when no white bread or rolls will be served on the tables of German hotels and restaurants. The wartime black bread replaces them.

The order compels bakers to use more German rye and thus help the farmer get rid of his rye surplus. Bakers may sell pure white breads only up to 200 grams and then only to private householders. Regular loaves must contain 30 per cent rye flour. "Diners out" may bring their own bread to the restaurants.

Today's session ended a three day debate over the financial reforms, which will cut Germany's yearly expenditures by $345,000,000. The measures will inaugurate the strictest economy in every department of national and state governments. Salary cuts of government employés is the chief, and most unpopular, measure.

Bruening Is Elated.

The chancellor and his ministers were elated over the day's results, not having anticipated the majorities they received.

"We have thus resigned ourselves to a Spartan life for the next three years," Chancellor Bruening said. "Even if our income grows, we will have to use the excesses to pay our debts. It is the only way to pull Germany out of her financial difficulties."

The session itself was a stormy one, in which the Fascist deputies Herr Frick and Herr Stoehr delivered fiery speeches attacking the government, trying hard to discredit Bruening.

While the votes were being cast Fascist members threatened to beat up the farm bloc representatives and members of the Economic party who failed to vote fully the way the Fascisti wanted them to.

Found Strangling

MISS ANGELINE GRABOWSKI.
[TRIBUNE Photo.]

With a thin cord knotted tightly around her throat, Miss Angeline Grabowski, 22 years old, 2223 North Hamlin avenue, who later said she was the victim of strangler kidnapers, was found semi-conscious in a vacant lot adjoining 733 South Kolmar avenue last night. The girl, formerly a radio company employé, was taken to the county hospital, and later to the Fillmore street station where she was questioned by Capt. Patrick Collins and Lieut. Thomas Duffy. She asserted she had been abducted by two men near Harrison street and 5th avenue, dragged into an automobile, and afterwards thrown into the lot, her throat bound with cord.

LOWER PRICES BOOM BUYING, SURVEY SHOWS

Merchants Are Cheered by Shopping Rush.

Holiday buyers are doing their seasonal shopping early, trooping away from department stores laden with bundles, because present prices for most commodities are from 15 to 50 per cent lower than they were at this time last year.

State street has cut prices, particularly on staple articles of clothing suited for Christmas gifts, and an investigation yesterday revealed that this is the reason for the spurt in sales registered on that crowded thoroughfare in the last week. It was the observation that the daily cash totals are not yet comparable to those of the 1929 season, although they are creeping upward as the buying rush assumes normal proportions.

Make Survey of Prices.

To test the present cost as compared with that of a year ago, reporters visited three large department stores and priced merchandise, noting declines in each store for almost every article named. Optimistic Over Buying.

Big business men and outlying merchants make similar reports: bankers note increased expenditures, amplified by the release of Christmas savings, and the heads of the district chambers of commerce seem optimistic over the Christmas buying situation. These are a few of the comments:

F. Edson White, president of Armour & Co.—"There is nothing fundamentally wrong with business other than that people are not buying and consuming at the usual rate. Confidence has not been restored since the stock market crash in 1929. Slowing up of purchasing caused slowing up of manufacturing and this in turn lessened employment and further reduced the nation's buying power. Nevertheless there is plenty of money and savings deposits have grown month by month throughout the depression.

"Reserve stock and commodities of all kinds are diminishing, and one fine day the country will awaken to the fact that there is not enough goods to meet requirements. There will be no blare of trumpets or blowing of whistles to mark this day; possibly it has already arrived; possibly it will come during the Christmas shopping period. But in any event its coming is certain, and shortly afterward the depression will have disappeared.

More Real Estate Deals.

John G. Zelezny, president of the Twenty-Sixth Stret State bank—"The best sign of all is the increased number of real estate transactions effected through this institution within the last few weeks. Confidence in the market is returning and people with money have passed the stage where they are reluctant to invest in household furnishings, a new automobile, or some luxury."

Philip E. Osterholm, secretary of the Clark-Wilson Center Business Men's association—"People are doing their shopping with a smile. Already they seem happier because Christmas is coming. I believe that the Christmas boom may be the boost needed to put business on its feet again, and lift it out of its depression."

L. A. Listug, vice president of the Madison-Kedzie Trust and Savings bank—"Since July and particularly in the last six weeks a feeling of confidence that business is and will continue to pick up has been evident. I do not recall a single concern which does not expect to show a profit for 1930."

More Investment Seekers.

Frank J. Tomczak, vice president of the Second Northwestern Trust and Savings bank—"More people are inquiring about investments, which is proof of a fundamentally right trend. There has also been an increase in bank deposits. Greater activity on all lines of transportation and hence in the shopping center presages an upward trend. An executive of a Logan Square department store told me yesterday that a day's receipts two weeks ago were double what they were a year ago this time."

POLICE HUNT WOMAN AFTER MAN IS FOUND SLAIN IN UTAH HOTEL

Salt Lake City, Utah, Dec. 6.—(AP)—Police tonight sought Jean Doyle, 29 year old blonde, for questioning in connection with the slaying and robbery in a hotel of Sam Frank, 65, jewelry auctioneer of Memphis, Tenn. Jewels and money approximating $5,000 in value are missing.

Frank's body, with mouth gagged and hands tied, was found in his hotel room this morning by a chambermaid. A broken liquor bottle with which his skull had been fractured, a partly filled liquor glass, an empty drug vial and a woman's beauty compact indicated to police that a drinking party preceded the slaying.

A woman's voice and laughter, issuing from Frank's room shortly before midnight, deterred his partner, Martin Perel, from entering when he returned to the hotel last night.

My Precious Christmas List

. . . completed finally after weeks of almost Sherlock Holmes strategy in poking and prying into masculine needs and desires. I've stared with embarrassing frankness at frayed ties and tired looking socks. I've conferenced with Aunt Isabel about sizes until I feel like an animated "tape measure." But now it's finished and I've a truly invaluable document. The shopping part is going to be fun. For I know the store to choose in is the store of a man's choice . . . The Hub. Where I can shop leisurely, with the knowledge that in the largest of men's stores I'm certain to find those tasteful, practical things to wear for every man on my list.

STREET WORKERS VOTE TO STRIKE; 4,000 TO GO OUT

Unions Fight Appointment of Savage as Foreman.

Four thousand employés of the city street department, including street sweepers, garbage handlers, truck drivers, and all repair men will be called out on strike tomorrow unless Richard W. Wolfe, commissioner of public works, removes James Savage, a political appointee of the Thompson machine, from his position as general foreman over all street repairs.

This move was unanimously voted last night by general foremen of the unions involved. Michael Carozza, head of the seven street unions, said he would meet with Wolfe tomorrow morning and if Savage is not immediately removed the strike will follow.

Brother of Joseph P. Savage.

The union action is a result of the appointment of Savage, a brother of Joseph P. Savage, Thompson appointee to the board of education. Savage took the place of Jack McAuliffe, former general foreman, who died several days ago. McAuliffe was a union man who came up from the ranks and took a civil service examination to obtain the position.

Savage, said the union leaders, is not a member of the union, has had no previous experience in repair work, and is not a civil service man. The union men contend that the new foreman should be a union man, familiar with the work, and chosen following a civil service examination.

"Savage does not know a paving brick from a ballot," Carozza said. "In fact the ballot was his method of obtaining the job. If he says otherwise I will put him on the street with a brick in one hand and a measuring rod in the other and leave it to any engineer to decide as to his ability to issue orders to my foremen, who all know the work and should have had an opportunity to take an examination for the position."

Issue Put Up to Wolfe.

Yesterday Carozza sent a committee of three to see Thompson at his retreat at Wedron, to ask if the appointment was a mistake. Thompson informed the committee that Wolfe would make the decision.

Commissioner Wolfe, reached at his summer home near Sawyer, Mich., said: "A strike at this time would be an injustice to labor. There is enough unemployment. Carozza broke faith with me when he called a strike of 100 granite block workers. He promised that no strike would be called without a consultation with me."

Wolfe explained the appointment of Savage by saying the foreman's job was executive in nature and a union man was not necessary.

VOTE $200,000 BOND ISSUE FOR HARVEY SCHOOLS

Voters of school district No. 152 of Harvey, at a special election yesterday, approved a bond issue of $200,000 for the construction of additions to schools. The vote was 380 to 219.

The money, according to Dr. David J. Hughes, president of the school board, will be used for new units of the Whittier and combined Lowe-Longfellow schools. A new site, to the east of the Lowe-Longfellow school, also is to be purchased out of the funds.

Bids on the work will be opened at a special meeting of the school board next Thursday.

Charles V. Barrett, chairman of the board of review, opened his mayoralty campaign headquarters in the Hotel Sherman yesterday. They are in the well known "214" suite from which several Chicago Republican campaigns have been directed.

Eden T. Brekke, committeeman of the 37th ward and vice chairman of the county central committee, is in charge there. He is one of the younger leaders and is recognized as the spokesman for a string of northwest side wards. He is a member of the west park board.

"Entirely aside from politics," said Brekke, "support is rallying to Mr. Barrett in such volume that we have found it necessary to open headquarters in order to take care of his campaign matters."

MINE WORKER CRUSHED TO DEATH.

WIFE, 20, SAVED FROM SUICIDE ON I. C. TRACKS

A young woman who "borrowed" a cigaret from a bystander and then leaped in front of an Illinois Central suburban train at 39th street yesterday with the cigaret still in her mouth was saved from death when the motorman, Ralph Snyder, stopped the train before the wheels of the front truck passed oved her body.

She gave her name as Mrs. Mildred Middleton, 20 years old, 4011 Lake Park avenue. She said she had left home determined to drown herself after she had taken several drinks with her husband, Lawrence, a cab driver, and then quarreled with him.

She was sent away from the lake front, she said, by a south park police squad and then decided to jump in front of a train. She was taken to the Hyde Park police station, where she is to face disorderly conduct charges tomorow.

OPPOSE ITALY ON PUBLICITY FOR OVERSEA FORCES

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

GENEVA, Dec. 6.—Italy's proposal for complete publicity of overseas forces was violently opposed by the British, French and Japanese at the general discussion on the report of the preparatory disarmament commission today.

Although the league covenant, which all four nations signed, stipulates that the members give detailed information about their armies and navies, the powers balked at including the colonial forces.

René Cassigli of France, with its foreign legion and the black man power in equatorial Africa, led the fight. Lord Robert Cecil, who probably had in mind the colonial necessities of Britain's empire, strongly backed up the French spokesman, and N. Sato of Japan likewise gave support to the Frenchman.

FATE OF RUSSIAN WAR PLOTTERS IN HANDS OF JUDGES

Verdict Expected Today as Death Is Asked.

MOSCOW, Dec. 6.—(AP)—Eight engineers, confessed plotters for foreign intervention in Russia and the overthrow of the soviet union, tonight awaited their sentences. These, which will mean to them either death or imprisonment, will be pronounced about 6 p. m. tomorrow (10 a. m. C. S. T.).

After a brief session of the court today, during which the last two of the defendants, Sergei Kuprianov and Xenephon Sitnin, pleaded for life in order that they might "work for the upbuilding of the country," the judges retired to deliberate. The trial has lasted since Nov. 25.

Prosecutor N. B. Krilenko, in a long closing argument, demanded the death penalty for all of the eight defendants, but it was generally expected mercy would be shown some of them, who, perhaps, would be sentenced to ten years' imprisonment.

Plead for Mercy.

Both Kuprianov and Sitnin, like the others who had already pleaded before the court, recognized their full guilt while asking for mercy.

Sitnin, as he spoke to the court, was greatly affected and his eyes were full of tears. He asked that his life be spared.

Kuprianov was pale and appeared to be ill. He spoke only a few minutes. "My lawyer already has explained for me and I have little to say. I fully admit my guilt. I have concealed nothing from the court. I know that the Proletarian court has no feelings of vengeance and, therefore, I hope that I may be given an opportunity through honest work to wipe the blot from my name."

Asks to Redeem Self.

Alexander Pedotov, a trembling old man, said that he did not want to die a traitor's death, but wished to live so that he might partly redeem himself.

Prof. Leonid Ramzin, leader of the alleged conspiracy, again admitted that his previous hatred of the soviet system of government had been wrong and declared his belief that the masses of the soviet union had found the "true path to follow."

The final pleadings in the courtroom were broadcast throughout Russia.

Jury Deadlocked

MRS. JOSEPHINE KUJAWA.

Unable to reach a verdict after four hours of deliberation, the jury in the case of Mrs. Josephine Kujawa, self-admitted slayer of Mrs. Mary Slomba, alleged paramour of Mrs. Kujawa's husband, Stanley, was ordered locked up for the night at 11 p. m. by Judge George Fred Tuth of the Criminal court. Mrs. Kujawa shot and killed Mrs. Slomba at a christening on the night of May 25 at the home of Stanley Bulinsky, 5858 Archer avenue. Her defense was temporary insanity. The state demanded that the jury fix the punishment at life imprisonment.

POLICEMAN DIES, TWO WOUNDED IN GUN BATTLE

Fargo, N. D., Dec. 6.—(AP)—A policeman was slain and a deputy sheriff and a bandit were wounded, the latter critically, in a running gun fight through the streets of Fargo and Moorhead, Minn., today after the holdup of a grocery store here.

About thirty shots were fired in the fight before the robber, cornered, sent a bullet into his own head, but not before he had fatally wounded Roy Larson, Moorhead policeman, and slightly wounded Peter McArthur, Cass county, N. D., deputy sheriff.

INDIANA SOCIETY DINES WITH WIT, BUT NO SPEECHES

Prize Bull Is a Figure in Banquet Pranks.

Hoosier wit sparkled, its brightest and Hoosier talent paraded on the stage of the grand ballroom at the Palmer house for more than four hours last night to entertain some 700 natives of Indiana. But not one of this gathering of distinguished Hoosiers rose from the banquet board to make a speech.

It was the dinner of the Indiana society of Chicago, the 26th annual function staged by Chicago leaders in industry and the arts to celebrate the fact that they all hail from the state of Indiana. It is an old tenet of this society that speeches shall be barred at their yearly parties, so not a word was uttered save by a corps of 80 entertainers who likewise are Indiana boys and girls who made good in the big city.

They Feast on Satire.

Their satirical arrows were aimed at public men and public matters, from Mahatma Gandhi of India and his salt rebellion to local schemes for banishing gloom.

A chorus of 60 voices, led by Hilda Burke, sang of the glories of Indiana, its arts and artists and of the banks of the Wabash. They even sang praises to the prize bull of Purdue university.

This 2,000 pound beast, led out of the Purdue exhibit at the International Live Stock show at the stockyards and herded into the Palmer house, was the central figure in a pageant portraying the society's suggestion for a new Indiana state seal.

Bull Led Before Banqueters.

To crashing cymbals and blaring trumpets a college man in professional garb led his charge into the ballroom by a ring in its nose, while attendants struggled to keep the bull from butting a cornucopia of fruits from the arms of Ceres, goddess of the harvest, who accompanied the animal in the procession.

On the stage the bull pawed the boards and threatened to leap down among the tables of banqueters or bolt in the direction of the chorus girls, who in quavering voices sang praises to the "pride of old Purdue." When the bull was finally pushed and pulled from the stage Lawrence A. Downs, president of the society and of the Illinois Central railroad, offered a vote of gratitude to the animal for being "a perfect gentleman."

Gibes Fly on All Sides.

Gibes were aimed at Samuel Ettelson, Judge Lyle, King George, John T. McCutcheon, Clement Studebaker Jr., Fletcher Durbin, Dolly Gann and many others.

Samuel Insull and Robert P. Lamont, secretary of commerce, were the principal guests. Sitting at the honor table also were Myron C. Taylor, James A. Farrell, George M. Reynolds, Rufus C. Dawes, Gov. Leslie of Indiana, Gov. Emmerson, Rome C. Stephenson, Melvin A. Traylor, Judge Will M. Sparks, Gov. Kohler of Wisconsin and Dr. William C. Covert.

TWO NATIONAL BANKS IN SIOUX CITY ARE CLOSED BY BOARDS

Sioux City, Ia., Dec. 6.—(AP)—The First National bank and the Sioux National bank were closed after business hours today by their directors.

J. L. Mitchell, president of the First National bank, and John A. Magoun, head of the Sioux National bank, said frozen assets and general business conditions were responsible for the action. Deposits in the First National bank amounted to more than $7,000,000, while those of the Sioux National bank exceeded $3,500,000.

Signs were placed late this afternoon on the doors of the two institutions, which were not affiliated, saying that D. H. Reimers, National bank examiner, had taken charge.

The banks were two of the oldest in Sioux City. The First National bank, organized in 1870, was capitalized at $1,000,000. The Sioux National bank was 20 years younger, with capital stock of $400,000.

Confidence was expressed that both banks would be able to reorganize and reopen as soon as bank examiners had had an opportunity to inspect the assets of the institutions.

Total resources of the First National were listed as $8,977,130 and resources of the Sioux National were given as $4,731,955.

CHIPPEWA DENTIST DIES.

Chippewa Falls, Wis., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Dr. E. E. Nussle, 49, dentist, died here early today following a paralytic stroke suffered two days ago. He was the son of the late Dr. E. E. Nusle, a physician. His widow, daughter, his mother and sister survive.

YOUNG IGNORES 'CERTAIN MALE CHILD' IN WILL

New York, Dec. 6.—[Special.]—The will of Courtland H. Young, magazine publisher, was filed in Surrogate's court today. It leaves three-fourth of his estate in trust to his daughter, Rosabelle, eight. Three brothers and two sisters are the residuary legatees.

After stating that the testator intentionally omitted to make provision for Rosabelle's mother, the former Dorothy Campbell, actress, the will declares:

"I am not making any provision for a certain male child to whom I am informed she gave birth on or about Dec. 26, 1924, nor will I in any way provide for certain other children which may be born to her."

The will directs that $250 a month be paid to Rosabelle during her minority, the rest being held for her benefit. After she is twenty-one she is to receive the full income; at thirty she will get one-fourth of the principal; at thirty-five one-third, at forty one-half, and at forty-five the remainder.

LINDSEY WILL HEAR SERMON ON MARRIAGE BY BISHOP MANNING

New York, Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Judge Ben B. Lindsey, exponent of companionate marriage, announced today that he would be in the congregation tomorrow morning at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine when Bishop William T. Manning will preach on the topic, "A Message to the Diocese as to Certain Issues Now Before Us and As to the Meaning of So-called 'Companionate Marriage.'"

Judge Lindsey added that he "might rise up in the midst of the bishop's sermon and ask him why he had forbidden his clergy to listen to my address on the same subject recently."

He also wrote a letter to Bishop Manning defending his attitude on companionate marriage. "I shall be in your audience to hear you speak on this subject," he asserted in a postscript.

'GRAPE RACKET' VICTIM SLAIN IN BROOKLYN

New York, Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Lying in a pool of blood with a bullet wound in the temple and another in the right shoulder, the body of Giuseppe Pizzigino, 37, of Brooklyn, was found early today. Police believe he was a victim of the "grape racket war" which has caused more than a dozen deaths in recent months.

The body was discovered outside a house in Brooklyn by a passer-by whose name the police did not obtain.

Although residents in the neighborhood denied hearing shots, police are convinced the man was killed where his body was found. No weapons were found on the body, but a watch and $20 were on his person.

Pizzigino, according to police, was the stepfather of Carmello Coppolino, recently acquitted of complicity in the murder of Patrolman Charles Sauer. Sauer was shot and killed while chasing holdup men in Brooklyn more than a year ago.

He was taken to the detective bureau and charged with vagrancy.

The detectives, Harry Larson and Jack Whedon, rang the bell at Volpe's home and were answered by Mrs. Volpe.

"My husband's in bed," she said. "He can't be bothered now."

"We have a warrant for his arrest," the detectives answered. "And we're going to arrest him, peaceably or otherwise."

Dresses for Ride to Cell.

After some delay the detectives were admitted. They found Volpe in lurid green silk pajamas. He asked permission to dress and the police looked on as the gangster shaved, pomaded his hair, and donned a light gray suit, a striped shirt, with tie to match, a chocolate brown tweed overcoat with brown velvet collar, and a gray hat. Several rings sparkling with large diamonds decorated his fingers.

At the bureau Volpe refused to talk and asked that arrangements be made to furnish bail for him. He is known as one of Capone's chief lieutenants. He will be arraigned before Judge John H. Lyle tomorrow.

Capone Wedding This Week.

The marriage of Mafalda Capone, 18 year old sister of Al Capone, and John Maritote, young brother of Frank Diamond, will take place in Miami this week, it was learned yesterday. Chicago was rejected as the scene of this union of two leading "public enemy" families because of the vagrancy warrants against Al and Diamond, according to reports.

The young couple left the Capone home at 7244 Prairie avenue Friday night for Miami, a reporter who called at the house was informed. A query as to whether Al will be present was answered with a shrug. It was regarded as certain, however, that Capone would attend. Capone, it is said, will present a home and $50,000 dowry.

A marriage license was obtained two weeks ago by Maritote, who gave his age as 23 and his address as 1727 Polk street.

Continue Stanton Hearing.

The hearing on extradition proceedings for Danny Stanton, charged with the murder of Jack Zuta at a Wisconsin resort, was continued yesterday until next Friday before Judge Philip Finnegan in the Criminal court.

Maj. Calvin Goddard, ballistics expert, was subjected to a lengthy cross-examination by Attorney Michael Ahern, representing Stanton. Goddard declared that the bullets which killed Zuta were fired from a gun which the state charges has been traced to Stanton.

BUSINESS WOMEN PLAN JOURNEYS TO CONVENTION

The women transportation experts include Miss Elsie B. Overly of the Monon railroad, Lafayette, Ind.; Miss La Verne Chellis of the Pennsylvania railroad, Erie, Pa.; Miss Hattie Wilkerson, Portsmouth, Va.; Miss Bessie C. Woman Awarded $55,000 for Rail and Auto Accident

A jury in Superior Judge Martin Isaacs' court yesterday returned a verdict of $55,000 in favor of Miss Mary C. Boyle, 40 years old, 9851 Prospect avenue, for injuries received in an accident Dec. 3, 1928. The suit was against the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railroad and the Piper Bread company. Miss Boyle was waiting for a train at the Beverly Hills station of the railroad when a bread wagon was struck by a train at 99th street. The wagon was tossed into the air and fell on the station platform, pinning Miss Boyle beneath it. The jury held that the accident was due to negligence.

RAILROAD SURVEY ADDS 20 MILLION TO ASSESSMENT

Charges Leased Properties Evade Taxation.

Railroad properties having a full value of nearly $20,000,000, on which no taxes have been paid to the county for several years, are being placed on the 1929 assessment books, it was revealed yesterday. The assessed valuation of this property would be about $7,200,000. This was announced by Harry S. Cutmore, director of appraisals for the board of assessors, in a report on a survey of railroad properties.

The property represents buildings and land owned by railroads, but not used for railroad purposes, and includes vacant land, coal yards, warehouses, factories, office buildings, and homes. All of this property has been leased by the railroads to individuals and firms, Cutmore said.

Under the law this property should be scheduled for taxation by the county, Cutmore said. Instead the railroads have scheduled it with the state tax commission, as if it were property used in railway operation, he said, and are paying their taxes directly to the state auditor of public accounts on a basis of 7 per cent of gross receipts.

County Loses Taxes.

Thus, by scheduling the property with the state, according to Cutmore, the county has been losing taxes. The property was not on the county books in 1928 and 1929, Cutmore said, and most of it has probably escaped taxation by the county for many years.

Representatives of all railroads affected have been summoned to appear before the board tomorrow to be advised of what is being done.

The survey of railroad properties—the first made in 25 years—has been carried on since the reassessment was ordered, more than a year ago, Cutmore said, and has revealed the following facts:

That out of 1,218 parcels of property subject to taxation by the county 454 parcels have not been scheduled with the board of assessors. The 454 parcels have been appraised by Cutmore at $19,939,900. The property scheduled is valued at $38,780,800.

Adds 7 Million in Tax Values.

That nine railroads failed to schedule any of their property taxable by the county. That one of these, the Illinois Central railroad, failed to schedule 36 parcels, which alone are valued at $7,000,000.

In terms of assessed valuations Cutmore's figures show that $7,192,734 was omitted from the books in 1928-'29. The assessed valuation of railroad properties scheduled in 1928-'29 was $14,348,912. The addition of new properties as a result of the survey has increased the figure to $21,541,646.

The following table shows a few of the changes being made on the books, giving the name of the road, the assessed valuations of properties as scheduled in 1928 and the 1929 figure, including properties added by the survey:

	1928.	1929.
B. & O.	$ 2,646	$ 481,903
C., B. & Q.	1,876,228	2,213,186
Great Western	0	13,232
North Western	2,644,438	2,959,294
Chi. & West. Indiana	195,466	648,912
Grand Trunk	580	40,677
Chicago Rapid Transit	1,191,356	1,873,647
Michigan Central	0	91,280
Illinois Central	0	2,500,000

Cutmore said the railroad assessment books will be turned over to the board of review the end of this week.

William H. Malone, chairman of the state tax commission, announced that a petition for a mandamus to compel the county board to publish the 1928 real estate assessment lists will be filed tomorrow morning.

POLICE RADIO TRAPS 2,625 IN 4 MONTHS

Radio's efficiency as an auxiliary of the police department was emphasized last night by Acting Commissioner Alcock when he released figures covering the four months operation of the short wave station here. These show that 2,625 arrests have been effected by it. The record:

	Calls broadcast.	Arrests.
August	802	71
September	2,965	480
October	5,269	944
November	8,099	1,131

Acting Commissioner Alcock's figures were cited in a report to the city council finance committee. An outstanding feature was the number of instances where arrests were made before criminals could get away from the scene. The average time of response to broadcasts by squad cars and flivvers was 3.16 minutes. The report asks for an appropriation of $20,000 to install a north side broadcasting unit at the Town Hall station.

WHAT THEY FORESAW.

We have occasionally commented on the failure of the legal profession to take a position upon and stimulate discussion of the constitutional aspects of prohibition, especially at the time of the consideration and passage of the 18th amendment. That failure has now been emphatically if tardily corrected by the American Bar association, but our readers may be interested in an attempt made in 1918 by some distinguished members of the association to procure a pronouncement against the amendment on constitutional grounds. We were not informed of this effort until it was called to our attention the other day by the secretary of the Voluntary Committee o' Lawyers, an organization which for years has been commendably active in developing among lawyers an appreciation of the importance of the constitutional issues raised by the amendment.

It was at the 41st annual meeting of the American Bar association, held at Cleveland after congress had submitted the amendment to the states, that the committee on jurisprudence and law reform presented and moved the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the American Bar association declares its devotion to the fundamental principles of the American constitution by which national affairs are controlled by the nation and local affairs by the states, and, therefore, it urges the legislatures of the several states who have not yet acted upon the prohibition amendment proposed to the constitution to decline to ratify the same, both for this reason and also because it purports to confer concurrent jurisdiction upon the federal and state authorities in the legislation under its provisions and in their enforcement."

A motion to postpone consideration of the question indefinitely was carried by a small vote, 75 to 68, but the fact that the meeting was held in Ohio, then one of the strongholds of organized prohibitionism, and therefore contained an unusual proportion of Ohio lawyers, may have had something to do with the unfortunate and we believe unrepresentative result. The argument on behalf of the resolution was made by a very noteworthy group of men—namely: Frederick N. Judson of Missouri, Moorfield Storey of Massachusetts, Everett P. Wheeler of New York, George Sutherland of Utah, James D. Andrews of New York, Stephen S. Gregory of Illinois, Henry St. George Tucker of Virginia, Frederic W. Hinrichs of New York, Thomas L. Parkinson of New York, and William L. Marbury of Maryland.

The opposition directed itself in the main at the evils of the saloon and also the need for winning the war, to which several of the speakers thought prohibition was essential. In these arguments little consideration seems to have been given to the fundamentals of constitutional principle or to the nature and limitations of law. It was the supporters of the resolution who dealt these aspects of prohibition. Mr. Moorfield Storey's remarks for the resolution seem to us especially significant in the light of present conditions:

"My feeling about the matter is that it is our duty as the representatives of those who believe in the orderly procedure of the law, who believe in the constitution of our country, to recognize the fact that the conditions of men differ in different parts of the country, that there are certain places where this law could be enforced and certain other places where it could not be enforced, to ask that the persons who control legislation in the separate states shall have an opportunity to deal with the problem presented in each state for themselves, and that they shall not be controlled in their action by persons who are not familiar with their condition and who feel, as we all do, that the evils of intoxicating liquor are very great. Great as they are, they are not to be abated by trampling on the rights guaranteed by the constitution, striking at the rights of the states, by adopting an amendment which is certain to bring on serious complications in the future."

Experience has driven these wise words home to thousands of lawyers and other citizens who in their preoccupation with the evils of the liquor traffic or the tremendous problems of the war gave them too little consideration in 1918. Today the air is clearer, we have felt the stern lash of experience, awakening us to a better regard for the principles which prohibition trampled down, and we know that of the benefits which the prohibition advocates promised some have not arrived and others have been purchased at too high a price.

VIRGINIA GOES COLONIAL?

The Yorktown sesquicentennial commission has voted to erect a monument to Lord Cornwallis and to the valor of his defeated army, to be dedicated next year when the 150th anniversary of the surrender will be celebrated. It is self-evident that if it had not been for the noble lord there would not have been any Yorktown. He himself had become quite indifferent, seemingly, where an end was put to his ramblings in the south and later in life did not remember much about it. Service and honors in India had expunged the Virginia episode from his recollection and it was British to dismiss the matter as, at the best or worst, trivial. It was an incident connected with a colonial affair of little importance.

Yorktown preserves a hole in the river bank where Cornwallis is related in legend to have hidden out during the most impressive of his mortifications. This is known to be wholly false, although it is true that a headache kept him from appearing with his troops at the final muster to meet Gen. Washington in person. The legend should be summarily disposed of before the statue is dedicated.

The Virginia magnanimity shows a willingness to forget that the war in the south was rough. In the north it had for the most part a certain politeness. After Arnold had turned his coat he was responsible for considerable hell raising in and about his New England birthplace and for considerable more in Virginia, but Gentleman Johnny Burgoyne was excessively amiable and Gen. Gates and Gen. Schuyler were well disposed in return. Gen. Howe fought well but never too hard against the revolutionists, and he generally had more important social and personal affairs on hand than the affairs of any campaign. With an exception here and there the war in the north was distinguished for its savoir vivre, but not so in the south.

One Virginia monument might be to Gov. Jefferson taking to his heels two jumps ahead of Tarleton's troopers. It was an unmannerly war, with Tarleton and Rawdon achieving some notable frightfulness throughout Virginia, North and South Carolina. It is to be hoped that Virginia in remembering Cornwallis will not forget Rochambeau and De Grasse. It may be all in a proper spirit. Some day Atlanta may dedicate a monument to Gen. Sherman.

RELIGIOUS HYSTERIA IN RUSSIA.

The Russian sedition trials have some of the qualities of heresy trials. The accused are charged with specific acts which were counter-revolutionary or traitorous. The confessions substantiating the charges are naïve. The accused conduct themselves as if they were government witnesses rather than persons in jeopardy. Americans and Englishmen, with their traditions of criminal law practice, naturally observe the court-room proceedings as a hoax elaborately prepared for effect in and out of Russia. The hearing appears as a show cruelly rehearsed with the victims responding to their cues in hope of mitigating, somehow, their apparent fate.

That would be the only meaning of such proceedings in an alleged civilization elsewhere than in Russia, but pretentiously irreligious Russia has in fact a voodooism as emotional as that of the jungle. The creed may be a hocus-pocus of political and economic decrees and the physical god may be the mummy of Lenin, but the enthusiasms are those of the Fifth Monarchy men, the wilder Anabapists, or the Holy Rollers.

Such a spirit has authority in Asiatic origins, and the behavior resulting from it could not be measured by normal occidental patterns of thought and conduct, although occidental abnormalities might furnish an understanding. The records of the witch trials in colonial Massachusetts may furnish some parallels. The victims in these courts were plainly impressed by the general religious sense of their guilt. Some of them were weak minded and lost all vestiges of reason when confronted by the ostensibly sober minded of their community listening credulously as judges to such charges. Others were persons of normal minds aware of their great danger, but obviously impressed by the credibility of the stories told against them.

In consequence the defense is as curious a jumble of insanities as the prosecution, and defendants by their own answers helped the judges to throw the rope around their necks. The records of heresy trials also give illustrations of abnormalities in defense quite as striking as the abnormalities of prosecution.

The Russian trials may be explainable as a prearranged show with the accused playing their part for what ameliorations they can thus obtain for themselves, but some consideration must be given the phenomenon of religious excitement expressing itself on the benches of the doomed as well as in the ranks of the prosecution.

Editorial of the Day

THE RECENT CRISIS.

[The London Statist.]

England most conspicuously and other countries having a legislature more or less modeled on or in some sense resembling that of England have so far, in Europe, succeeded in masking the inherent defects of the system. But in South America the political history of the ten republics and the formation of their populations is so different from the experience of Europe that the governmental system has to be modified to suit the peculiar conditions prevailing in the various republics.

In has to be remembered that the ten republics came into existence very much in the form in which we know them at present not much more than a hundred years ago. They had been for three centuries before that colonies of Spain. South America, unlike North America, was relatively a densely populated continent and, although there were, and are, vast spaces virtually uninhabited, nevertheless nearly all the republics contain a substratum of a native and relatively highly civilized people. Those people were kept in subjection; and, in addition, over large areas of the continent slaves were imported from Africa. In the sequel it will be seen that the populations which any legislature has to represent are relatively small and their interests, or supposed interests, exceedingly diverse. Most of these republics are accustomed to rely to a large extent upon the support of the army, partly because populations are rarely homogeneous and partly because their legislatures have never obtained a position of authority in the minds of any class which would even give them the appearance of the right to rule, as is the case, for example, in those countries of Europe where the representative theory is accepted as interpreted by orthodox democrats. This merely means in the case of South America that when the legislative system practically fails to function and a change becomes manifestly necessary and often desirable, that party, or section, which secures the support of the ablest directors of the military force available will succeed in altering the government very much as an election alters the government in those countries which accept with relatively little question the elective theory.

AMERICAN HEROES

ALEXANDER MACOMB

A Brief Review of His Contribution to Our Country

(The articles of which the following is the twenty-ninth are intended as five minute sketches of early Americans of particular achievement and distinction, each flashed briefly against the background of the times and conditions in which the subject made his contributions to the nation. Their names may be well or may be little known now to the generation which has inherited the benefits of wise, laborious, and in many instances heroic work.)

(Picture in Rotogravure Section).

ONE of the Illinois counties has a nicely congruous conjunction of names. It is Macdonough, and its county seat is Macomb.

The county is named for the commodore who won the battle of Lake Champlain in 1814 against the British fleet, and the county seat is named for the general who with the aid of this naval victory turned back the most powerful British expedition which ever attempted an invasion of the United States.

When Sir George Prevost withdrew his troops after a futile attack upon the works of Gen. Alexander Macomb at Plattsburg, the most formidable British force which had ever tried to drive its way into American territory was in a retreat. It is possible that the defense would have been a failure if it had not been for Macdonough's success on the water, but that fact does not deprive Macomb of the credit for a stand behind his works which stopped a veteran army.

Alexander Macomb was among the first American soldiers to have West Point training. He was born at the frontier town of Detroit, April 3, 1782; his father, a native of New York, being a fur trader in the west. The family returned to New York shortly after the making of the peace which closed the revolution, and the boy had an academic education in New Jersey, where his associates included many sons of French émigrés who had sought the new world to escape the revolution. His juvenile predilection for war games was probably not particularly distinctive, but in his case it indicated a real turn of mind. At the age of fourteen he had been pressing for a chance in military service and in January, 1799, he was successful in getting a commission as cornet of light dragoons as the beginning of a career in the American army.

Although a lieutenant in the regular service he was sent to West Point for training when the academy was opened and was among its first graduates. On the declaration of war against Great Britain he was given the Third artillery and soon made his military qualities apparent in the discipline of his regiment. In November, 1812, he was ordered to Sackett's Harbor.

The futility of most of the frontier operations, both as undertaken from the American side against Canada or from the Canadian side against the United States, is the most notorious record of the war. When Sir Isaac Brock was killed the British lost the only man who combined courage, intelligence, and energy in a superior command. Until the failures of the American army had worn out the old generals or incompetent politicians directing it and had produced Brown, Scott, and Macomb, there were no fit qualities in command. Macomb had no chance to acquire much distinction in the errors and timidities which marked most of the campaigning. Nevertheless, in January, 1814, he was brigadier general and fortunately for himself and for his country, he was in command at Plattsburg when the great British expedition tried to force its way down into New York.

No British army in neither the French war for the possession of Canada nor in the revolution had been so numerous or of such veteran composition. It was at least twice the size of the force with which Burgoyne had endeavored to make his way down the same path. Most of the regiments were fresh from the Spanish peninsula, provided in every detail of war, and expecting nothing but success. Five thousand men were left in reserve and eleven thousand crossed the border. Their weakness was their commander in chief, Sir George Prevost.

The invaders were so confident that they advanced towards Plattsburg with little regard for the American militia and the skirmish parties which were detailed to impede the approach. "The British troops," Macomb reported, "did not deign to fire on them (the American skirmishers) except by their flankers and advanced patrols. So undaunted was the enemy that he never deployed in his whole march, always pressing on in a column."

For Prevost, however, the essential of the expedition was the control of the lakes, which he trusted Capt. Downie, in command of the British fleet, to obtain over the Americans. Macdonough had anchored the four larger vessels of his squadron in Plattsburg bay, off Crab island, using kedge anchors which would permit the winding of his flag ship, the Saratoga, in case his starboard guns should be disabled. Downie chose to fight at anchor also, disregarding his superiority in long range guns.

After two hours of fighting Nov. 11 the British squadron seemed to be on the point of victory, but Macdonough was able to turn his ship and open his larboard batteries, whereas Downie found that his cables had been cut and he was unable to get the Confiance, his flagship, about. The success of the American and the failure of the British commander in this respect was decisive.

Macomb's troops, behind the Plattsburg works, saw with exultation the destruction of the British naval forces. The British land attack, which had been slow in reaching its formation, was discouraged and disconcerted by what had been seen on the water. An ineffective attempt to work by the right flank across the Saranac river to a ford and gain the reverse of Macomb's fortifications was made, but the column missed its way. Before it got to the ford it heard the cheers of the American troops. The movement was brought to a halt to ascertain what was causing the shouting. This indecision apparently lost the day for the British. The main body of the attack was waiting for the assault of this flanking column and it never was delivered. Prevost treated the naval loss as decisive to the mortification of his brilliant army and with the loss of a great amount of supplies he retreated the next day.

Against this greatly superior force Macomb had a disorganized miscellaneous body of 3,300 men. The effectives, according to the general's report, did not exceed 1,500. British chagrin at the failure was acute, although the duke of Wellington, whose troops had been involved in it, was inclined to think that Prevost had nothing but retreat available after Downie had lost control of the lake. Years afterwards the duke said that he had sent them some of his best troops from Bordeaux, "but they did not turn out quite right; they wanted this iron fist to command them."

The city of New York presented the freedom of the city to Gen. Macomb. The state legislature voted him a sword. Congress passed a vote of thanks and had a gold medal struck and presented to him. The brevet of major general was conferred on him and his commission was given the day of the repulse of the attack, Nov. 11, 1814.

With the signing of the peace, Gen. Macomb was transferred to Detroit to establish military posts in the west. In 1821 he was called to take charge in the engineering bureau in Washington. On the death of Gen. Jacob Brown, in 1828, Gen. Macomb was given the full rank of major general and appointed commander in chief of the army.

His last public appearance was at the funeral ceremonies of President Harrison in Washington, when he commanded the funeral escort. Two months later he was stricken with apoplexy and died June 25, 1841.

RABBIT HUNTERS BEWARE.

THIS is the season for rabbit fever for the very good reason that now is the time when the men go forth to kill, while to the women falls the privilege of staying at home and preparing the game for the table. Rabbit fever is known to the scientists as tularemia. In some of the Rocky mountain country they call it deer fly fever. By one name or another it has been recognized in nearly all parts of the country.

Every year there come reports of rabbit fever in some locality where the people have been disposed to be chesty because they thought they had none of it. It is a disease of wild animals especially, and rabbits head the list of infected animals. The animals that have it are sick. Beware of the wild animal that acts sick. If a rabbit will not get up, or cannot run, or is very easily caught or killed, it is safer not even to put him in the bag with the other kill. The fever has been known to follow handling infected rabbits. Skinning them is more dangerous.

If there has ever been infection from a tame rabbit that fact has not come to my attention. Tularemia is a fever somewhat resembling typhoid and doubtless some of the cases have been diagnosed as the latter disease. Some water supplies and some sources of milk may have been unjustly charged with causing typhoid. Since the cause of the two diseases is not the same, probably many physicians have called some of their cases by other names, such as paratyphoid. Both rabbit fever and typhoid fever can be diagnosed by blood tests.

WHEN THE ARCHES WEAKEN.

F. G. writes: Would appreciate your view on the cause and treatment of weak arches. I am a woman 25 years of age, and never had any trouble with my feet until recently and now have very severe pains, especially at the joints where bones are formed.

REPLY.

The probability is that you were born with trouble in your feet though you did not know it. Doubtless, however, you have done enough to help the good work along. Now you are penitent and want help. For bunions, wear broad shoes. Keep your toes straight, if possible, by toe rings or with cotton. You may need operation to remove whatever is spreading the bones of the ball.

For weak arches, walk pigeon toed. Exercise to develop the muscles of your feet and lower legs.

A QUESTION OF T. B.

S. E. B. writes:

1. Does the amount of sputum that a tuberculous person raises have anything to do with whether he is in the early or advanced stage?

2. If he is thought to be in the early stage but raises quite a lot on some days, what are his chances of recovery?

3. Is there any hope if he has a temperature?

4. If so, should he remain in bed?

REPLY:

1. The large amount of sputum may be because there are old tubercular cavities. In some acute, rapidly progressive cases there is excess of sputum. However, as a rule, the sign points to chronicity and cavity formation.
2. His chances might be fairly good.
3. Yes.
4. Yes.

YOUR EYES ARE TIRED.

H. M. R. writes: Can you tell me what causes one's eyelids to quiver continually? I am a wearer of glasses. What will relieve it?

REPLY.

Fatigue is the cause. Rest is the remedy. It is possible that all you need is to rest the eyes such as comes from wearing glasses that fit. You may need to use your eyes less. You may need a general rest.

NOT SO GOOD.

J. O. S. writes: Is a half teaspoonful of soda in a glass of warm water just before retiring beneficial for indigestion?

REPLY:

I think taking it habitually would do more harm than good.

16 YEARS AGO TODAY

DECEMBER 7, 1914.

BERLIN.—It is officially announced that the Germans captured Lodz, in Russian Poland, on Dec. 6. Lodz is the second largest city of Russian Poland and is 75 miles southwest of Warsaw, the Polish capital. It has long been an objective point of the German army in campaigns against Russia.

PETROGRAD.—The Novoe Vremya's correspondent at the front says: "The shelling of Lodz began a week ago and grew heavier and heavier, until the shells were landing in the town at the rate of five minute intervals. From the battlefield the town appeared enveloped in flames."

LONDON.—The Daily Mail's correspondent in northern France says: "A great battle is in progress. It began with a violent cannonade, which centered around Elverdinghe, on the great road and railway which connect Furnes with Ypres." The allies continue to push forward in Flanders and in northern France, but the Germans explain that they are giving ground for tactical reasons. The advance so far as Flanders is concerned seems to have been checked on the outskirts of Langemarck.

CHICAGO.—State's Attorney Hoyne announced that he had evidence implicating about twenty-five more detectives who took money to protect Chicago against crooks and more money from the crooks to protect them against justice. Three members of the grand jury that returned the graft indictments against Capt. John Halpin, Lieut. John H. Tobin, and former Detective Sergeant Walter O'Brien received anonymous letters threatening their lives.

30 YEARS AGO TODAY

DECEMBER 7, 1900.

WASHINGTON.—There was a curious piece of political buncombe indulged in by the house of representatives as a result of which the post exchange or army canteen, which has the indorsement of practically every officer in the army, was legislated out of existence so far as the house is concerned. A resolution offered by Littlefield of Maine was adopted, 159 to 51. The members had no intention of the measure ever becoming a law. The resolution was introduced to gratify the W. C. T. U., now in convention here, and undoubtedly will be killed in the senate.

LONDON.—The opening session of parliament was one of almost sensational features. Lord Salisbury virtually warned Europe that Great Britain would permit neither mediation nor intervention in the Transvaal war, and declared that the conflict would not cease until every shred of Boer independence had been torn away from the two Dutch republics. Lord Rosebery practically resumed leadership of the Liberal party. He denounced in bitter words the government's policy in South Africa and in the Far East.

CHICAGO.—Charles William Fullerton died at his home, 628 Dearborn avenue, following a stroke of apoplexy on Dec. 4. He was born in Chicago 62 years ago. His father, Alexander N. Fullerton, was one of the city's pioneers and left a large estate which was increased under the management of his son. The latter was a director and life member of the Art institute and erected Fullerton Memorial hall at the institute in memory of his father.

50 YEARS AGO TODAY

DECEMBER 7, 1880.

CHICAGO.—The recent unhealthy speculation in produce has begun to bear fruit. Two firms doing business on the Chicago Board of Trade went to the wall yesterday.

CHICAGO.—Congressman Springer of this state introduced two bills in the house yesterday. One is to increase the number of Supreme court justices to nine and the other provides for fixing the day of presidential and congressional elections on the second Tuesday in October instead of the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November.

CHICAGO.—In a communication to the city council, Commissioner Waller recommended the use of stone instead of wood for street pavements as being more durable, healthful and cheaper in the end.

CHICAGO.—It will prove an item of interest as well as a source of gratification to Chicagoans to know that our English neighbors are sending hither for models of steam and sail vessels to do service on Lake Winnipeg.

THE REVOLT AGAINST BUREAUCRACY.

Chicago, Nov. 22.—Let us not judge too quickly as to the causes of the recent Democratic victories. This revolt at the polls was not simply a protest against Republican graft, or Hoover policies, or prohibition, nor against business depression. These are all merely the surface indications of a much deeper disorder. Those ballots registered a growing resentment against the increasing inroads by designing politicians into the private lives and business of our citizens.

The tendency of bureaus is always to expand, never to decrease. Every crossroads politician advances some fantastic and usually economically unsound theory to justify his election. The Wildmen of Iowa and the Handicappers of Kansas sponsor loudly this or that new remedy for curing all ills, and some additional line of business falls under the domination of designing politicians.

The latest governmental detour into socialism is the farm board, growing by leaps and bounds, spending millions like water, and actively engaged in putting thousands of individuals out of business, using their own tax money to destroy them.

Our government is already topheavy. It is estimated that more than one man in ten is now engaged in some form of governmental activity. There are over 750,000 federal employés alone. The tax burden to support all these political leeches is overwhelming.

The real estate assessment for Cook county alone for last year was over 250 million dollars, and they wonder why business is bad. No economic structure can stand up under such throttling, and unless our ostrich lawmakers wake up pretty soon they will find their golden egg has vanished.

A congress of repeal should be the next platform. DONALD KIRK.

REFLECTIONS OF A JUROR.

Downers Grove, Ill., Nov. 24.—I have just completed jury service at the Criminal court and I recommend it as a liberal education for every citizen. The demeanor of the court was highly commendable. Justice to all seemed the keynote.

The selection of jurors was often amusing. Usually the defense lawyers picked the dumbest available. That's how I managed to get on so often. They then proceeded to confuse the evidence with bombast and oratory.

The court instructed us as jurors to be impartial and objective; that under the law a man was presumed to be innocent until proven guilty. However, having been called by the state and paid by the state, one naturally felt allied to the state—namely, the prosecution. A jury represents therefore twelve additional prosecutors, and woe to the defendant who hasn't a bona fide case.

Hence the question arises as to the wisdom of permitting twelve laymen, untrained in the machinations of law, arbitrarily to pass on the guilt or innocence of any man. R. M.

WHISTLES.

Lombard, Ill., Nov. 20.—It is becoming almost impossible to live in this town [Lombard] on account of the railroad whistles. They keep it up day and night and they are so sharp, shrill and incessant that no one can sleep.

FIRST AID TO OPERAGOERS.

Chicago, Nov. 27.—Your editorial concerning manners and gestures for operatic singers is an enjoyable, constructive criticism of operatic performance.

Your comments concerning the acting on the cinema stage are quite in order, except that you overlook the vitally important rôle of the printed subtitle flashed upon the screen in giving significance to the pantomime of the silent drama. Without printed titles running through a silent motion picture the pantomime would soon be meaningless and subtlety impossible.

Since in America we are trying so hard to popularize opera, would it be completely out of order to modernize operatic presentation by introducing the innovation of printed titles? These titles might be projected upon a suitable artistic screen, either above the arch or at the side of the arch, so the rail and file of operagoers could follow the libretto, so to speak, as the action progressed.

It would be a simple matter from the standpoint of projection technique to blend from one title to another without distracting attention from the stage. By properly synchronizing titles with scenes any one could follow the somewhat protracted operatic story without being required to memorize the libretto.

ALICE AND THE MOUSE.

Chicago, Nov. 26.—Can it be possible that Mickey Mouse and his absurd confrères are in need of champions?

Mickey Mouse has given us to see and hear what Alice gave us to read when she went through the looking glass. Alice on the screen would be a terrible disappointment, no matter how she was treated, and Mickey would be dull indeed to read about him. For once we got a break. Things rest as they should, and let no oldsters bring about the death of the only short comedy star since Chaplin quit making two reels. Rather let them read again "Alice in Wonderland," which perhaps they have not done since childhood, and then see whether Mickey Mouse is still "silly."

Is it too much to hope that some day we may see a full length feature film starring Mickey Mouse, the droll bear who read "Three Weeks" while waiting for her date, and the walrus who sings 'way downstairs in his tummy?

Of course, Mickey Mouse is absurd, but aren't we all?

ON JUDGES.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—The fact that Judge Lyle got more votes than any other Republican judge should convey the idea to some of the other judges that a vast number of citizens feel that a judge should have their interests at heart rather than those of the gangsters and hoodlums who prey on them.

HENRY R. SULLIVAN.

THE MOTE AND THE FIRE TUG.

Chicago, Nov. 26.—The city of Chicago has a lot of nerve to be demanding longer hours to keep the bridges closed and complaining about constantly interrupted traffic when they have to hold up rush hour traffic while the bridges are opened to allow the city's own fire boat to pass.

How about getting some of those objectionable smokestacks recommended to barge owners for the Graeme Stewart?

CALLS ON HOUSE G. O. P. TO ELECT OWN SPEAKER

Schnackenberg Sees Peril in Democrat Rule.

BY PARKE BROWN.

If a Democrat is elected speaker of the Illinois house of representatives with the aid of Republican votes, it will be only after a hot battle.

That was the prediction yesterday by State Representative Elmer J. Schnackenberg of Chicago, who appealed to his fellow Republicans to remain regular and to stand by the party against the Democratic minority. He said that chaos and injury would come to the business of the state if the lower house of the assembly were organized against the Republican administration.

At the same time Representative Michael L. Igoe, Democratic minority leader, now considered his party's choice for speaker, replied to an inquiry by saying that he would not enter into a bipartisan deal of any sort in order to win the honor.

Five G. O. P. Votes to Decide.

The next house, which convenes in January, will consist of 81 Republicans and 72 Democrats. The latter will need only five votes from across the aisle in order to control. It is reported that no less than four different Republican groups, representing several times the required number of votes, have threatened to go Democratic.

It was against this situation that Schnackenberg, floor leader of the Cook county Republican group, protested in a statement he said was prompted because other party leaders have remained silent in the face of the impending danger.

"The voters of Illinois," he said, "have elected a Republican majority to the house of representatives which meets at Springfield on Jan. 7. The Republicans should not and cannot shirk the responsibility thus placed upon them.

"A Pitiable Attempt."

"These facts should not be forgotten by Republican members, especially now that a suggestion has been made that the house be organized by a combination of Republican and Democratic members, electing a Democratic speaker. A bipartisan deal for control of the legislature would be a pitiable attempt to transfer responsibility from the party in power to the minority party, contrary to the expressed wish of the people.

"Even many Democrats will hesitate to enter such a deal when they realize the vicious trading and bargaining upon which such a transaction would be predicated. Such a combination can be justified only as a last resort if and when all other means have failed.

"The Republicans should elect the speaker and the officers of the house and should control the selection of all committees, giving due recognition on committees to the rights of the minority. Every member on the Republican side should be considered for a position of honor and authority, bearing in mind his term of service, his ability and his own desires.

Visions Assembly Deadlock.

"The consequences of a bipartisan organization of the house would be detrimental to the interests of the people. There would be constant bickering and frequent clashes in the house, prolonging the session and preventing proper consideration of the important measures certain to be presented at the session.

"The senate probably would be at loggerheads with the house most of the time. The veto power of the governor, seldom exercised because seldom required, undoubtedly would be brought into extensive use because of the unwholesome influence which a bipartisan deal would have on matters of legislation.

"Thus it is easy to foresee a paralyzing deadlock between the executive and the legislative branches of government."

Representative Igoe said he had heard of a number of Republican members who have said they may vote for a Democratic speaker this time.

"However," he added, "I have had no direct contact with them. In previous sessions I have been the Democratic nominee for speaker. I may be nominated again this time. If I am I shall be the Democratic nominee and not a bipartisan nominee. I shall not be a party to any bipartisan deals. If any Republicans desire to vote for me that is a matter for their own judgment and nothing more."

800,000 AMERICANS TRAVELED ON HIGH SEAS DURING 1929

Secretary Adams emphasized the work done by the hydrographic office for aviation.

PRIVATE DOCTOR PASSING? DEBATE ISSUE AT CLUB

Merits of State Medical System Discussed.

The private practice of medicine as a system is outmoded and eventually some form of state medicine will obtain, Dr. Charles S. Bacon said in addressing the League for Industrial Democracy in the City club yesterday. Dr. Edward H. Ochsner, taking the other side of the controversy over state medicine, said that it had tended in other countries to increase "the too large percentage of drones and human parasites already in society," and that if tried here "political favorites would get the big salaries."

Dr. Bacon postulated a system of state medicine as it would be, headed by a health commissioner, with hospitals and clinics over the city, which would be manned by doctors as full time officers of the state, carefully selected and reasonably paid on full time salaries. The mistake of the German system, where physicians are paid on a fee basis and the system is controlled by laymen, should be avoided, he said.

Cites Conditions in Chicago.

That idea did not appeal to Dr. Ochsner.

"How would Dr. Bacon and I like to work under men appointed by our nominal mayor, Thompson, actually appointed by our real mayor, Sammy Ettelson?" he asked. "I for one wouldn't like it, and I wouldn't do it. The best men would not stand for it and would refuse to enter the medical profession if we had state medicine."

The isolation of the private physician and the difficulty in obtaining satisfactory consultations at reasonable cost to the patient, as well as the demoralizing effect of fee-splitting as practiced among some private physicians, were listed as dangers to the private practice system by Dr. Bacon.

Clinics are an improvement over private practice systems, the teaching clinic having developed the best care that can be given, he said. But medical hospitals cannot supply the whole community, he said. He spoke of a clinic institute organized on a foundation.

Physicians Must Have Control.

"Such an institute can do good work and be of very great benefit to the community," he said. "The difficulty of indorsing any such movement, however, is that it is uncertain what control the physicians have over the institute. Anything in which the physician himself does not have the control is not apt to be successful."

Dr. Ochsner said that if the number of government employes were increased greatly, it would be impossible to dislodge a corrupt group, and that a revolution would be likely to follow. He added:

"While it is true that the large majority of Americans have nothing left over at the end of the year, they have had the pleasure of spending as they pleased instead of at the dictates of a paternalistic government."

Dr. Michael Davis of the University of Chicago took issue with Dr. Bacon on the subject of "lay control," saying that the public, which receives service and pays for it, should and would determine the conditions of practice. The typical hospital is managed and owned by lay people, not for profit, he said, and physicians, setting professional standards and doing their professional work, have done so successfully.

Miss Amelia Sears, newly elected county commissioner, spoke on "State Medical Care as Seen by a Social Worker." Mrs. Sarah B. Schaar of the Jewish Social Service Bureau was chairman.

Two Lose Lives as Automobile Crashes Into Post

Wreckage of automobile after crash at Jackson boulevard and Hamilton avenue early yesterday in which Benjamin H. DUNCAN DANA, 39, MILLIONAIRE AND WAR VET, DROWNS

Ex-Harvard Grid Star Falls from Boat.

Marblehead, Mass., Dec. 6.—[U. P.]—Duncan Dana, 39, millionaire oil burner experimenter, grandson of the founder of the New York Sun, Charles A. Dana, and 1914 Harvard-all-America football selection, was found dead on the shore of Eagle island late today.

Two fishermen, Gerald Smith and "Mucho" Frost, who had been searching for him in their dory, made the discovery. Death was due to drowning.

Dana, who served in the Lafayette escadrille flying corps in the world war and who was an executive in the research laboratories of the General Electric company in Lynn, was a champion swimmer. He left his home here at 5 a. m. today to go duck hunting, leaving in his outboard motor boat to which was tied a small punt.

The motor boat was found later in the day by Joseph G. Fisherman. It contained a rifle which friends identified as "Dana's favorite hunting rifle."

Discovery of the motor boat precipitated a search in which coast guards, private motor boats and fishing schooners and dories joined.

When found the body was minus boots or overcoat and police said they believed Dana had removed these in an attempt to swim to the island when, perhaps, he fell from his small craft. The body was found 20 feet below high water.

Lloyd Daley, one of victims of automobile crash.

TRUCK DRIVER IS KILLED IN CRASH; WOMAN IS HELD

Emil Luetje, 23 years old, of Niles, was killed last night in a collision between his unlighted truck and a machine containing two Chicago women at Waukegan road and Oakton street, Niles. Mrs. Ted Swag, 33, 5046 North Monticello avenue, driver of the car, was held.

This and four other deaths raised the county motor toll for the year to 1,024. The other victims:

Michael Grady, 44 years old, 3200 West Harrison street. Died of injuries received on Friday when struck by the car of a hit and run driver.

Mrs. Margaret O'Leary, 58 years old, 17 South Loomis street. Killed by a truck in front of 1630 Madison street. Rocco Pacentine, 2301 Grand avenue, the driver, was held.

Clarence Washington, 73 years old, 1347 West 111th place, colored. Died of injuries suffered on Thursday when hit by the machine of Robert Rucker, 11410 Aberdeen street.

Unidentified man. Killed by the car of Roy Sardina, 1512 Grand avenue, at Grand avenue and Peoria street.

BORROWS RAIL CHIEF'S AUTO; JAILED FOR CRASH

After he had borrowed a car belonging to Fred Sargent, president of the Chicago and North Western railroad, Edward W. Runden Jr., 22 years old, a senior at Northwestern university, was arrested early yesterday morning, charged with reckless driving and intoxication. With him were another student and two girls. The police let them go home.

Runden, whose home is at 2531 North Drake avenue, Chicago, is chairman of the social committee of the Theta Beta Phi fraternity. On Saturday night it held open house. Mr. Sargent's son, Edgar, a fraternity brother of Runden, was present. It was shortly after midnight when Edgar, according to Runden, let him have the car.

Flivver Policemen Robert Labbe and Phillip Middan say they stopped Runden first at 1 a. m. for speeding, but did not arrest him. At 5 a. m. he crashed into their car, they said. He then was arrested. His case was set for hearing tomorrow.

THOS. BALLARD, CIVIL ENGINEER, DIES SUDDENLY

Thomas L. Ballard, 47 years old, a civil engineer with offices at 1509 Jackson boulevard, fell dead, supposedly of heart disease, yesterday afternoon in an apartment at 602 Gary place. Miss Genevieve Smith, 28 years old, the tenant, said Mr. Ballard was an old friend and was making a call on his way home.

With his wife and an 11 year old child, Mr. Ballard lived at 5726 Kenmore avenue. He had been subject to heart attacks for some time, his partner, Edwin Hancock, 2912 Commonwealth avenue, told the Town hall police.

DR. CARL BOEHM, PHYSICIAN HERE 40 YEARS, DEAD

Dr. Boehm was one of the oldest members of Richard Cole Masonic lodge, the Oriental consistory and Medinah temple. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Clara Boehm. HUMAN TEST TUBE CELLS MAY BE CANCER KEY Grow Tissue Artificially at St. Luke's Hospital.

An apparently successful experiment in the cultivation of human cells in a test tube which holds promise of being of benefit to mankind in the search for a cure for cancer is under way in the laboratory of St. Luke's hospital. This was announced in a pamphlet, "Miracles of Medicine," issued yesterday by the trustees of the hospital.

The experimenters, according to the pamphlet, started with a small piece of tissue from a human body which was placed in a sterile glass chamber with a small amount of coagulated blood and plasma pressed from living tissue.

Cells in Tube Multiplying.

The chamber, sealed off from air, was then placed in an incubator heated to the exact temperature of the human body, where subsequent microscopic examination showed the tissue not only remained alive but that the cells actually are multiplying.

The research workers hope to produce cancer in the living test tube tissue.

Success in producing a cancer under such conditions, the pamphlet points out, would open to research workers the opportunity for unlimited experiments with hundreds of substances and compounds to determine which, when applied directly to the cancer, was capable of stopping its growth.

A number of research workers have succeeded in producing cancers in rats and mice by artificial means, one by rubbing pitch into the skin, and another by feeding parasites found on a particular type of cockroach, but none have been able to discover the actual mechanism which caused the disease.

Hunt Cause as Way to Cure.

The St. Luke's authorities hope, by being able to observe the processes under the microscope, to solve the mystery of the cause of the disease, and when this is known it is believed the remedy will be obvious.

In discussing the experiment the booklet says:

"Paul Ehrlich, German scientist, tried more than 600 chemical combinations before he found a cure for that disease which, excepting war, has been characterized as 'the greatest enemy of mankind.'"

The laboratory production of cancer cells, the booklet points out, would permit similar "trial and error" methods which could not be done with living sufferers.

INDIVIDUAL RACE OR BLENDED MAN? PARLEY DEBATES

Human Variety Is Called Light of Progress.

BY PHILIP WINSLEY.

Moses and Einstein!

Consider them as genius upthrusts from the stream of Jewish consciousness that has been flowing in the dark corners of the world for four thousand years.

Moses pointed the way to the one God-creator of heaven and earth. Einstein is leading the way to a formula which will explain all matter and force in terms of one conception.

We are in deep waters here, in waters where chromosomes and genes, hereditary factors and the mystery of racial inheritance lie buried, but the delegates to the human relations parley at Northwestern university yesterday did not hesitate to plunge in.

They Raise Many Questions.

Jews and Negroes, Protestants and Catholics, gathered at round table discussions in the new Sigma Alpha Mu Memorial chapel and the Saturday forum at the North Shore hotel, to raise many questions, if not to dispose of them.

One of the questions raised dealt with the advisability of racial groups yielding to the pressure of universalism, in which a new and blended type of man might be created, all wars cease and the millenium of brotherhood appear. This was put against the value of the preservation of group personality.

Rabbi Solomon Goldman of Anshe Emet congregation, associate editor of the Journal of Religious Education, took the ground that it was best for the welfare of man that each group be granted freedom to develop its own culture.

Negro Phase of Problem.

Dr. Abraham L. Harris Jr., acting head of the department of economics of Howard university, who has made a careful study of the Negro in the labor market, said that all programs for the belated development of the Negroes through the setting up of parallel institutions with the white race were doomed to failure. What was needed, he said, was a realization of the necessity of creating an organization that would cut across race lines for the advance of the great body of the people.

Rabbi Goldman agreed with him on this, but maintained that the group development was still essential to culture and the development of literary and artistic achievement.

He pictured the Jews of today as the children of Abraham and Isaac, one with those who had wept by the streams of Babylon, with those who had suffered and starved in pogroms and in the slums, one in a tremendous drama of survival of personality, a battle for the existence of their historic continuity.

Israel's Will to Live.

"Einstein and Moses are kin," he said. "What does that show? Jewish individuation. The universalists keen over the living Jews. They cannot understand Israel's irresistible will to live. The weak of all people always fall by the wayside. Would you raise debility and suicide to a national program?

"They have been the victims of social and business prejudice. Science may ultimately bring the world together, but the present evolution is in the direction of national group personalities. There has been an awakening of nationality throughout the world. People who have been in the grip of mighty powers for generations are now going back to their mother tongues. There are dents in the walls of imperialism. To deny a people the right to be itself is bad politics. Look what is happening in the British empire.

"How can life produce beauty without variety. When catholicity prevails, literature, moved by memories of group experience, will be dead. Would it bring the end of war? Perhaps, but only the moonstruck in mind refused to hear Beethoven during the years of the world war. The Jew will hold out. He is an expert at resistance. Hellenism, Romanism, all have failed.

"Here in America he is being put to the test. It is indeed a melting pot. The lure for comfort and excitement have taken hold of all. They have become standardized, uniform, 100 per centers. We do not yet enjoy the benefits of a democratic government, but all its curses are upon us. The majority becomes deified.

"Will the power gained in 4,000 years of history sink under the delights of materialism? Or will he again give colbr to the meaningless, monotonous uniformity of life. America needs a continuance of these group personalities. The American pattern is still in the weaving. We are not yet of age. How many centuries will it take to assimilate the colored people? How long before the mountaineers view life as Greenwich village?

"Each group has some value, a value inherent in the history, tradition and culture of personality."

8 MILLION AUTOS IN USE ARE WORTH BUT $25, SURVEY STATES

Washington, D. C., Dec. 6.—(AP)—Taking the American Automobile association's word for it, there will be 8,000,000 cars pounding the highways of the country at the end of 1930 valued at less than $25 each.

The figures were made public today after a survey based on the actual age of vehicles from registration tabulations and the average life of vehicles.

Highest prices listed for cars of the vintage of 1925 are $25 and 8,000,000 cars, forming 28 per cent of the total registration, have passed their fifth birthday. The blue book of the automobile industry does not list as of any value vehicles purchased before 1925.

Thomas P. Henry, president of the association, said, "The presence on our highways of so many worn out vehicles during 1930 may well be reflected in the year's toll of accidents and fatalities."

GROUP OPPOSES MERCY PLEA OF WILLIE DOODY

A delegation of suburban police officials and representatives of various clubs will accompany Assistant State's Attorneys Walker Butler and Ross Lee Laird to Springfield to appear tomorrow before the board of pardons and paroles to oppose an application for commutation of sentence for Willie [Baby Faced] Doody. Arrangements for the trip were completed yesterday.

Doody is under sentence of death for the murder more than one year ago of Chief of Police Charles Levy of Berwyn. His execution is scheduled for Friday, along with William Lenhardt. The application for clemency is filed in the name of Mrs. E. C. Murphy, 337 North avenue, Aurora, an evangelist, who works among the jail prisoners.

The delegation accompanying the prosecutors will include representatives of the Rotary and Kiwanis clubs and the chamber of commerce of Berwyn.

NAVAL PROGRAM TO MEET TREATY URGED BY LEGION

Committee Asks Hoover to Push Construction.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Official spokesmen for the American Legion today called at the White House and urged President Hoover to adopt a naval construction program which would give the United States tonnage parity with Great Britain by the date of expiration of the London naval treaty in 1936. The Legion program, presented by the Legion's national defense committee, calls for construction of sufficient ships to build the American fleet up to the maximum tonnage limits of the London naval treaty. Its cost, spread over five years, would approximate a billion dollars.

At the same time Secretary of the Navy Charles Francis Adams announced that the navy had asked the senate and house naval affairs committees to give first consideration in enacting legislation to the passage of bills providing funds for modernizing three second class battleships and for beginning construction of the vessels included in the new warship authorization bill prepared to start the nation on the road to the treaty navy.

Modernization Bill Pushed.

This latter bill, approved by the President yesterday, is to go forward to the house naval committee Monday when Chairman Fred A. Britten [Rep., Ill.] has called a special executive session. It includes one aircraft carrier, two 6 inch gun cruisers, eleven destroyers and three submarines. Its total cost spread over three years will be in the neighborhood of a million dollars.

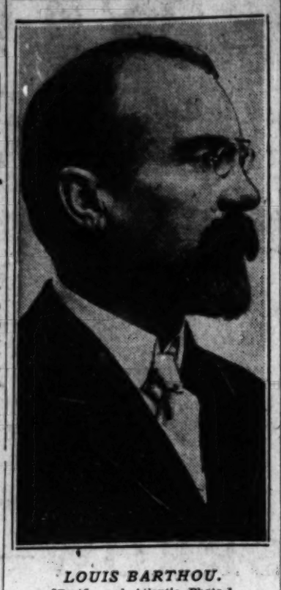
It is considered possible an attempt may be made in congress to increase the navy authorization program, although many leaders think it best to accept the present bill and fight for a larger one next year.

Robinson Heads Legion Committee.

The American Legion committee, which was headed by Charles Burton Robbins of Cedar Rapids, Ia., former assistant secretary of war, urged that the President approve the first installment of their five year program this year and furnish the money to begin it. Their first year program would be somewhat larger than the navy's program which was prepared after consultations with President Hoover and leaders in congress. The Legion is prepared, however, to back the administration program.

The Legion committee also recommended an increase in the enlisted and commissioned strength of the regular army. It advocated building the enlisted strength of the army up from 118,750 to 125,000. It suggested adding 209 officers to the army's 12,000.

To Form Cabinet



LOUIS BARTHOU.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Dec. 6.—Louis Barthou, 63 year old veteran radical Socialist senator and former premier, today was formally called by President Gaston Doumergue and accepted the task of forming a new government. M. Barthou is expected to have little trouble in nailing together a cabinet, but the real news behind the appointment is that it paves the way for former Premier Raymond Poincaré's return to power.

M. Poincaré refused yesterday to accept the premiership because of his health, despite the clamor of the general public and wish of nearly all political parties.

It is understood that M. Doumergue explained to M. Poincaré that he is not needed at present, but that the moderates are bent on having him as premier during the presidential elections of next spring. M. Poincaré is then supposed to have said that he would be willing to assume power then. Immediately after this M. Barthou was summoned. The arrangement now seems to be that M. Barthou will be allowed to remain in power for a few months until M. Poincaré publicly enters the political ring.

NEW AVIATION POLICY MAY END ARMY-NAVY FEUD

Coast Defense Command to Be Shifted to Halt Row

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—A new aviation policy has been worked out by Admiral William V. Pratt, chief of naval operations, which may have an important bearing on final settlement of the eleven year old controversy between the army and navy over which service should be charged with the full responsibility of guarding the nation's coast lines from the air.

Under the new plan, only part of which has gone into effect, all combat aviation either at sea or on shore will be under command of the battle and scouting forces afloat. Thus the naval air stations at Coco Solo, Panama and at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, will be controlled henceforth by admirals in the battle and scouting forces rather than by the commanders of the fourteenth and fifteenth naval districts. The effect of this order is to concentrate the command of combat aviation to the fleet and to remove the navy from the criticism that it operates combat aviation from the land.

What the Row Is About.

The army-navy row over coastal defense functions centers largely around the question of whether the navy should be permitted to operate tactical aircraft, that is airplanes used in actual combat or fighting from the land. The navy claimed the right to operate such planes from Coco Solo and Pearl Harbor, asserting these were outlying coast lines.

In an effort to settle the dispute, President Hoover directed the bureau of efficiency, some months ago, to study the whole situation. This report is due this coming week.

The aerial dispute revolves around the interpretation of the army appropriation act of 1920, in which congress divides the aviation duties of the army and navy. It provides that "the army air service shall control all aerial operations from land bases," while naval aviation shall control "all aerial operations attached to a fleet, including shore stations whose maintenance is necessary for operations connected with the fleet, for construction and experimentation and for the training of personnel."

Charge Navy Violates Law.

The army charged a few months ago that the navy violated this law when it installed bombing planes at Coco Solo and Pearl Harbor and operated them from the land. To meet the army criticism the navy now has shifted the command of these stations so that they now come under control of the admirals commanding the air forces afloat. The navy can now argue that it operates no land planes from the land, that all its air forces ashore are actually operated from the sea.

Actually the change of policy does not cut down the number of planes the navy will operate at these bases. If the navy action reflects the views of the President it may mean that the army has lost its fight to control all land aviation.

DRY CHIEFTAINS REJECT PLAN FOR A REFERENDUM

But Will Lay It Before Big Rally This Week.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 6.—(AP)—A proposal that dry forces lend their support to some form of national referendum on prohibition was almost overwhelmingly voted down today by a group of nationally prominent dry leaders in executive session here.

The groups is comprised of what is known as the legislative committee of the National Conference of Organizations Supporting the Eighteenth Amendment, and its decision was virtually the first attack on the plan by an organized group of dry leaders.

The proposal would have the drys support a resolution for repeal until the measure had been adopted by congress. The proviso would be added that the resolution would be considered by constitutional conventions in each state, in which the drys could fight solidly against it. It was argued that without dry support the measure never could get by congress and before the people.

Plan Not Abandoned.

Despite the adverse vote today, however, assurance was given that such a referendum will be considered at a series of dry meetings here next week and will be incorporated in a blanket report to the conference, thereby providing opportunity for general discussion.

The legislative committee includes representatives from the Anti-Saloon league, the Women's Christian Temperance union, the Methodist board of temperance, the Southern Methodist board, the Flying Squadron Foundation, and the Good Templars.

Wets Meet Tomorrow.

A group of anti-prohibitionists will also meet Monday in Washington in what has been called a national constitutional convention. Neither the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment nor the Crusaders, two outstanding wet organizations, will be represented, however. The purpose of the meeting was given today as the finding of an answer to the demand of the prohibitionists to show them some plan to substitute for the dry laws.

Dr. Clarence True Wilson, Methodist board secretary, has said he would not oppose a referendum if the wets would agree on an alternative and would abide by the result if it were unfavorable to them.

Dr. F. Scott McBride, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon league, said today that "for the second time in the history of the dry organization the dry forces are getting ready to carry on an aggressive, nationwide program to overcome wet activities."

San Diego, Cal., Dec. 6.—[U.P.]—Nine members of a yachting party marooned Nov. 30 when the motorship Eola was wrecked on the northeast coast of Guadalupe island, 220 miles south of here, were safe aboard the U. S. S. destroyer Aaron Ward tonight, returning to San Diego.

MAJOR SHEPARD FACES JURY ON MURDER CHARGE

Army Officer Accused of Slaying Wife.

Kansas City, Kas., Dec. 6.—(AP)—A picture of Maj. Charles A. Shepard as plotting the death of his wife that he might marry blonde, 22 year old Grace Brandon of San Antonio was spread before a federal court jury today as S. M. Brewster, United States district attorney, outlined the government's case in the murder trial of the army medical officer.

In contrast, Harry S. Class of defense counsel, depicted the 59 year old tuberculosis specialist as a kind and affectionate husband, worried over his wife's addiction to liquor and disappointed in his home life. The officer was said to have been attracted naturally to the pretty Brooks field stenographer during his short period on duty at the Texas post, where he was taking a course in flight surgery.

Surgeon General Testifies.

Testimony began after a noon recess, but only four witnesses were heard, including Maj. Gen. M. W. Ireland, surgeon general of the medical corps of the United States army. Adjournment was taken until Monday because the government asked time to assemble an array of medical testimony it next wished to present.

The chief prosecution counsel, whose statement several times brought objections from the defense because of what they termed argumentative and impassioned expressions, told the jury the government would introduce ardent love letters from the major to Miss Brandon as part of its case. One of these letters, Brewster stated, was written three hours after the death of Mrs. Shepard at Fort Riley June 15, 1929, and began: "My darling sweetheart."

Actions Termed "Natural."

Summing up his statement, Mr. Class contended the government could prove nothing but the most natural things about Maj. Shepard. Throughout his outline, Mr. Class placed great stress upon what he termed the major's "natural" actions before and after his wife's death, and in his relations with Miss Brandon.

Opening statements began immediately after the success of a three day attempt to get a jury. Seventy-eight veniremen, in three different panels, were examined. Only two jurors expressed scruples as to the infliction of capital punishment, thus causing their excusal by Judge Richard J. Hopkins, but numerous others admitted having formed opinions from newspaper articles.

STATE CONCLUDES ITS EVIDENCE IN JAIL BREAK TRIAL

The prosecution yesterday concluded its evidence against Mrs. Julia Glovka, 60 years old, of Cleveland; Joseph Connior, 62 years old, former guard at the county jail, and Walter Wheeler, colored jail trusty. They are on trial in Judge Joseph Sabath's court on charges of plotting the escape of William Lenhardt, convicted slayer who is condemned to die on Dec. 12. It is charged by the state that Mrs. Glovka led the plot and furnished the revolver which was smuggled to Lenhardt in his cell.

George Gibson, assistant warden of the jail, was the last prosecution witness. He told of overpowering Lenhardt in his cell and of finding the revolver and some saws which were being used by the condemned man to cut his way out of his cell. The plot was disclosed by Frank Bell, who is under sentence of death for another murder.

Attorney Charlotte Slavitt for Mrs. Glovka said that one of her first witnesses tomorrow when the trial is resumed will be Lenhardt.

RESCUE FROZEN TRAPPER ON 6-DAY TREK TO BURY PAL

Winnipeg Dec. 6—(AP)—Hero ratings were given today to seven stout-hearted men of the northern trails, who made a six day trek to give a dead comrade a Christian burial and, while on the journey, rescued a trapper they found freezing to death.

Hauling a sled bearing the body of Ingrad Gurley, the mourners found the helpless trapper. Both of his legs were frozen. They placed him on the toboggan beside their dead comrade and resumed the long trudge through deep snow, to Great Falls, a journey of 56 miles The trapper is expected to recover. He was not identified.

Mushing his way over the trails, Mickey Gilleran, a patrolman of the Manitoba Power Co., had found Gurley in a dying condition. He summoned aid. Constable D. T. Cook of the provincial police and six others hastened to the spot with the sled. When they arrived Gurley was dead. Constable Cook broke the trail, followed by the funeral cortège. Only a few miles on, the trapper was discovered.

M'GOORTY PUTS HOPE IN LAW'S WAR ON GANGS

Chief Justice Is Bringing Citizens Into Fight.

siders at once the most menacing and the least excusable iniquity confronting Chicago. Four years ago he declared that judges should not be required to appoint south parks commissioners or to determine the number of employés in the fee offices of Cook county, and in the course of my interview with him he said:

"There is no more reason why the police department of Chicago should be subject to political influence than there is that the army of the United States should be so subject."

Judge McGoorty has not affirmed his convictions in talk merely. He has acted.

His Insurance Canceled.

As long ago as February, 1928, he was fixing high, though not spectacular, bail bonds. In the same year, owing to his energetic methods in the trials of gang robbers, the Glens Falls Insurance company canceled the policy for $10,000 on his home at 929 East 45th street, believing it to be not a good fire risk. As a result he felt that it was wise to take out "civil commotion" insurance at a high premium.

With Judge McGoorty's elevation to the chief justiceship three and a half months ago came enlarged opportunities.

Those opportunities h. has used with quiet skill and signal effect.

Yesterday he unfolded the story of the three months' work by the grand juries and imparted the outstanding conclusions on the crime situation which have been reached by them and by himself.

Some McGoorty Impressions.

Here are detached high points of his narrative:

"The bail bond situation in Cook county is most unsatisfactory. Eight thousand bonds were forfeited in the Cook county courts last year and only $5,000 was collected in forfeitures. In Milwaukee last year fifteen hundred bonds were accepted; only thirteen were forfeited, and the thirteen were collected in full. In New York county $257,000 was collected in forfeited bail bonds last year; in Cook county that much has not been collected in twenty years.

"Assistant State's Attorney De Witt wants from six to twelve detectives to hunt down bail bond fugitives. He should have them.

"A vital weakness in our crime situation is the weakness in detection and apprehension. Illinois statistics show that only one criminal in nine is apprehended. Since the killing of the notorious O'Bannion in 1924, more than two hundred gang murders have been committed in Chicago, and in no single instance has any of these murders been solved. Solution of any one of them would have been of great value in disclosing the master minds of the Chicago underworld.

Capone a Political Power.

"Al Capone is regarded as politically one of the most influential men in Chicago. I am convinced that this is the fact. It is no myth. His offer to withdraw from racketeering if allowed the monopoly in the booze traffic is evidence of his power and his arrogance.

"Of course, one of the greatest contributing causes to the success of organized crime has been the rapid accumulation of wealth—and resulting political power and influence—by prohibition violators. Indeed, while the opportunities of gain in the illicit booze traffic are so great the law enforcing authorities will be seriously handicapped in bringing about improvement in the crime situation. The prohibition laws must be liberalized, thereby removing one of the greatest contributing causes of crime throughout the United States.

"If the influence of the criminal who projects himself into politics can be destroyed, then the greatest handicap of our police department will have been removed."

Reviews His Problems.

Taking up the thread of his detailed narrative of present conditions, Judge McGoorty said:

"When I became chief justice of the Criminal court last September I felt that I should avail myself of the opportunity to present to the grand jury the crime situation in Cook county.

"I appreciated the fact that the grand jury is the most powerful body in the state for the prosecution of crime.

"I felt that Chicago was suffering from organized crime to an extent that not only affected its good name but threatened municipal government itself. Therefore I have presented to the different grand juries which have sat during the last three months cases of what is commonly known as racketeering. I have pointed out that the criminal activities of racketeers are not only resulting in control of trades unions and private industries but in a time of depression are also passing the cost of that control on to the consumer.

Evil Alliance Disclosed.

"As a result of investigations thus prompted, the grand juries have discovered a well established alliance between organized crime, the police department, and politics.

"That alliance is so well established that it has become manifest to me that no permanent reform relative to the crime situation can be had until the police department is divorced from politics and political influence.

"So long as it is subject to that influence we cannot have good municipal government for the simple but comprehensive reason that a police department is a city's first line of defense. Its chief should be chosen only on lines of merit and his tenure should be only during good behavior.

"Under the present system of uncertain tenure—a system having nothing to do with either capacity or good behavior—there is no opportunity for a chief of police to develop plans that will be of enduring benefit or value to the community. We have had disheartening proofs of that.

"Last year, at my suggestion, a school was established in the detective bureau and it was operated for several months with much success. I hoped that it would become a permanent feature and be like the New York police school. Recently, and without sufficient cause, it was abandoned. It was destroyed after a few months' work.

Survey Also Abandoned.

"Two years ago, also at my suggestion, a police survey was undertaken by experts. It also was abandoned, although it could not have been an expensive matter.

"These plans for the betterment of the service, through schooling, and for the ascertaining of its deficiencies through a survey, were both inexpensive and workable. They have been successfully tried elsewhere. Not their cost, not their difficulty, but sheer inertia and the distraction, demoralization and uncertainty resulting from political control wrecked them. They were sound propositions.

"Nor is appointment on the basis of merit a mere dream of reformers. It has been tried in our community. It has worked, and it is working today. About three years ago, when a scandal developed in the Cook county jail, I named, with the sheriff's approval, a commission to appoint a warden of the jail. As a result of the commission's work the late Edward J. Fogarty—for 14 years warden of the Indiana state penitentiary at Michigan City—was appointed.

An End of Scandals.

"Since then there have been no scandals at the jail. From the humblest to the highest, all of the staff have been put on an efficiency basis.

"I cite this to illustrate that the selection of a chief of police should be made wholly without political consideration and with the sole desire that the force be so efficient that Chicago can be placed in the front rank of cities for law enforcement."

Throughout this interview the judge was insistent upon the necessity of the rehabilitation of the police department on a nonpolitical basis. Plainly the department is much on his mind; plainly he is solicitous about it as being what he called "the city's first line of defense," and plainly he is without hope that successful battle can be given gangdom as long as this line is disorganized and debauched.

Scotland Yard Example.

He drew startling contrasts.

"In Scotland Yard," he said, "the head of that department of the London police has been 25 years in office.

"Berlin's chief of police has been 15 years in office.

"In Chicago we have had more than 25 chiefs in 50 years, and two in the last year, and another, according to the press, is in prospect.

"The complete detachment from politics of the police departments of London, Paris, and Berlin is a striking example of the benefits to be derived from placing police work on a highly specialized basis, for it is conclusive that organized crime in Chicago could not have attained its present power without protection by the authorities of the community.

"It is also a matter of common knowledge that in many instances promotions in the department are not based on merit."

How to Choose a Chief.

"What is the first step, judge, toward the correction of these scandals?"

"My recommendation is that the police commissioner be chosen by an honest, able, and courageous civil service commission, after the application of tests. If the present system is to continue, the appointing power—namely, the mayor—must be a man actuated only by a desire to serve the public good. Under the present blight of political control there can be no stability in the department and no continuity of effort and policy—only distraction and disorganization, due to apprehension caused by political intrusion. There would be as much justification for having politicians direct the movements of our army in war time as there is for having our police department under political control at this time.

"A police department always takes on the color of the administration in power. Hence we must in fairness consider Chief Alcock's inherited difficulties. He is terribly handicapped by traditional political influence. This is his greatest handicap. It is a pitiless dominance and it is exercised to some extent by the very men who are designated public enemies. That is why I would like to add that what I have said in reference to the department is directed to it as an institution. In the present fight the police under Alcock and Norton have been rendering very earnest coöperation. The fault is not so much with the personnel as with the policies, which in large measure control the personnel."

Murder Is Always Murder.

Judge McGoorty is impatient of the town's easy-going philosophy that every murder of gangsters by gangsters is another step toward the destruction of gangdom.

"No," he said, "let neither the police nor other public officials comport themselves with the delusion that gang rule will thus be broken up. The remedy is not so easy. One by one, it is true, small gangs are being wiped out, but by that process complete control of the revenues from protected vice and crime is concentrating in a single organization.

"There are no cureals for the present situation and no easy ways out of it. Any ephemeral or sporadic movement will be of little value.

A Spirit of Optimism.

"But I am optimist enough to believe that the situation can be rectified by an organized public opinion.

"Organized crime cannot long withstand the united will of a great community. It is not enough to express that will. It must be organized. Today in large centers of population the individual can articulate only through organization.

"If we can bring all the organized groups—such as the Association of Commerce, the Citizens' association, the City club, and the many service clubs—into one supreme organization the fight will be won. It has been lost to an organized group—namely: organized crime. Now only organized righteousness can win victory.

"It is a trite saying that public opinion is the greatest force in the world, but it is none the less true because it is trite. We are living under a representative form of government and those chosen by the people to enforce the laws will respond to the public will when the public will makes itself manifest in an organized form.

A State of War.

"The situation today is so acute that it means nothing less than war upon the lawless elements, but it is a war that must be conducted wholly within the law and without breaking down those barriers which protect the dearest treasures of a free man.

"One of the practical difficulties confronting us is a certain psychology of fear resulting from intimidation of witnesses. Any one, however, who can furnish competent evidence relative to racketeering or other forms of organized crime should, in the existing crisis, subordinate the risk of personal danger to the public interest.

"When it is remembered that thousands of our young men faced the danger of death for their country, why should the citizen be deterred by personal fear from aiding to bring about the restoration of law in Chicago?

New Spirit Appears.

"Such a spirit is beginning to manifest itself. Each succeeding grand jury has shown an increasing sense of its responsibilities and a braver determination to coöperate to the fullest extent in bringing malefactors to the bar of justice.

"These jurors have put aside personal apprehensions and are ably and courageously performing a specific duty. Through them the call is going forth to all citizens to organize for determined warfare by every lawful means against criminals who seek to erect a super government in the metropolitan area of Chicago."

Moral: Don't Get Your Nose in Way of a Coyote

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

REGINA, Sask., Dec. 6.—Harold Drader, farmer near Estevan, caught a coyote and decided to make a pet of it. Harold took the animal for a run today. The coyote was so pleased it jumped up, caught Brader by the nose, and held on for ten seconds. Harold now has a broken nose. The coyote is howling its cry for freedom once again.

Why Fund Is Cut.

The reduced allowance f buildings next year is due in the financial troubles last win the lack of tax collections.

The "debt service" of the fund, which chiefly means t ment of interest on money b on tax antipication warrants, fifteen times as much next ye was in 1928. For "debt servic year the budget provides $3,82 compared with $207,928 in 19 more interest paid, the less left for actual construction.

It is contended that there more actual construction buildings this year with an ap tion of $16,100,000 than there 1928, when only $14,288,102 wa out of an appropriation of $28

SCHOOLS ALLOW $16,000,000 FOR BUILDING IN 1931

Appropriation Smallest in Four Years.

BY OSCAR HEWITT.

The $16,000,000 budget allowance for new school buildings to be erected next year is the smallest appropriation of the board of education for that particular purpose in the last four years. It is predicted, however, effective results will be obtained in providing employment as well as more school accommodations.

The total appropriations proposed for next year from the school building fund, which not only provides for new buildings but also other permanent improvements, repairs, replacements, sites, payment of interest, and other items, will also be smaller than in any of the three previous years.

What the Record Shows.

The following table shows the appropriations for new buildings next year as compared with the three previous years and the total appropriations from the building fund:

Year.	New buildings.	Total from building fund.
1931	$16,100,000	$39,516,902
1930	22,905,074	33,045,901
1929	24,284,430	31,121,941
1928	28,839,680	34,794,960

In recent years there has often been little relationship between the appropriations and expenditures from the building fund. To illustrate—in 1928, when the appropriation for new buildings was $28,839,680, the board reports that only $14,288,102 was spent on buildings. In 1929, when the appropriation for new buildings was $24,284,430, the expenditures were only $8,871,607.

This year, with an appropriation of $22,905,074, it is reported that nearly all of that sum has been put under contract, although the actual figures for the year are not available.

The architects appropriated payroll for 1929 was for 189 employes, as compared with 128 for this year.

Why Fund Is Cut.

The reduced allowance for new buildings next year is due in part to the financial troubles last winter, and the lack of tax collections.

The "debt service" of the building fund, which chiefly means the payment of interest on money borrowed on tax antipication warrants, will be fifteen times as much next year as it was in 1928. For "debt service" next year the budget provides $3,827,558, as compared with $267,928 in 1928. The more interest paid, the less there is left for actual construction.

It is contended that there can be more actual construction on new buildings this year with an appropriation of $16,100,000 than there was in 1928, when only $14,288,102 was spent out of an appropriation of $28,839,680.

Under the budget it is planned to spend about 80 per cent more for other permanent improvements than was spent in 1928, and 90 per cent more in repairs and replacements. A comparison of the appropriations from the building fund for other permanent improvements and repairs in the four years is as follows:

Year.	Improvements.	Repairs and replacements.
1931	$1,049,152	$4,563,340
1930	984,781	5,602,721
1929	847,802	4,031,307
1928	709,012	3,817,666

The appropriations for repairs and replacements were not highly indicative of results in 1928 and 1929. Of the $3,517,000 appropriated in 1928, $2,872,858 was spent, and in 1929 of the $4,000,000 appropriation only $2,276,785 was spent.

Hunt for Auto Items.

Search was continued yesterday in vain for the items in the budget which provide automobiles for the members of the board of education. Automobile maintenance is not charged to the building fund. It is paid out of the educational and playground funds. The expense of the trustees' autos is in the budget, but is in such form that it cannot readily be identified as such. This expense is also covered up in this year's appropriation. The city corporate budget frankly discloses auto maintenance for those who receive it.

"It's in the school budget, all right," said a school employé yesterday, "but you find it, if you can."

"The help is only following the example of the trustees."

Robbed 4 Times

JOHN LUSSEM.

Two bandits robbed and slugged John Lussem, 83 years old, in his fire insurance office at 1076 West Harrison street yesterday. It was the fourth time he had been held up, and the second time he had been slugged in 20 months. The thieves, both young men, left their aged victim on the floor while they ransacked his desk and took $85. The crime was a virtual duplicate of that last July when two gunmen took $80 from his desk, and struck him down.

Other officers elected were: First vice president, Roy Dusenburry of Kankakee; second vice president, Dr. Charles Schott of Chicago; third vice president, E. V. Dickson of Aurora; chaplain, the Rev. John J. O'Hearn of Chicago; sergeant-at-arms, John E. Necomb of Augusta, Ill.

BRUSSELS, Dec. 6.—(AP)—At the village of Uccle, on the outskirts of Brussels, there was another pathetic gas tragedy today. Five children, ranging in age from 6 months to 6 years, were asphyxiated in their beds by gas escaping from a heater while their parents were away from home.

ALBERT DEMANDS WOLFE APPEAR IN CONTRACT PROBE

Seek Reason for Rejection of Low Bids.

Ald. Arthur F. Albert [43d] announced yesterday that he will demand that Richard W. Wolfe, commissioner of public works, be present at the meeting on Wednesday of the council committee on efficiency, economy and rehabilitation. The committee at that time will renew its investigation of the contracts let by Wolfe for the construction of the north approach to the Wabash avenue bridge.

Wolfe failed to heed the request of the committee to attend an earlier session. Since then the committee has been empowered by the council to proceed with the investigation, and the demand for Wolfe's attendance, according to Ald. Albert, will be made under the authority granted by the council.

Others Side with Albert.

Other members of the committee announced privately that they will join with Ald. Albert in the demand for Wolfe's appearance. They said they intend to ask the commissioner why contracts are not let to the lowest bidders and also why the city pays more for caisson excavations than does the Lincoln park board.

The contract for the north viaduct approach to the bridge was let by Wolfe to the Ketler-Elliott company instead of to the E. J. Albrecht company, the low bidder. Under the contract the city is forced to pay $10 a cubic foot for caisson construction below a depth of 75 feet, in contrast to the price of $2 offered by the low bidder. Testimony was given at the former sessions that the Lincoln park board pays only $1.43 for this work.

Wolfe Rejects Lower Bid.

Ald. Albert also has asked for the records on the contract for the grading and paving of Kinzie and North Water streets where they join the viaduct. This contract has been let by Wolfe to the W. J. Newman company on its bid of $164,612.

The low bid for the contract was that of $130,254 offered by the Starr Construction company, which was later withdrawn. The withdrawal left the Byrne Brothers Construction company low with its bid of $151,844. This bid was rejected by Wolfe in favor of the Newman bid. The commissioner said that the Newman company was the "lowest responsible bidder."

Wants Inquiry on Police.

"I want the committee to look into the police situation, also, since Acting Police Commissioner Alcock has announced his intention of asking for 3,500 more men," said Ald. Albert. "If Alcock wants more police I think that first he should call home the members of the police octette who are singing to entertain Mayor Thompson.

"It seems that the police are too busy entertaining Thompson and distributing his handbills to pay much attention to crime. It is evidence to me of a lack of morale in the police department when the police are ordered to spend part of their time handing out pamphlets to the school children."

CHARGED WITH MURDER.

A coroner's jury recommended yesterday that Samuel Lucca, 50 years old, 916 Hope street, be held to the grand jury for murder. Lucca shot and killed Mrs. Josephine Amato in her home at 718 South Claremont avenue on Friday night, and then attempted suicide.

URGE NINE FOOT CHANNEL COSTING 124 MILLIONS

Special U. S. Board Reports on River Projects.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—The special board appointed by the war department to survey the navigation possibilities of the upper Mississippi river between the mouth of the Missouri and the Twin Cities today recommended construction of a nine foot waterway at a total cost of 124 million dollars.

The board recommends construction of twenty-four locks and dams to insure a nine foot channel depth during the navigation season. The report, which was made under the direction of Lieut. Col. George R. Spalding, division engineer of the upper Mississippi valley division, senior member of the board, has been submitted to the board of engineers for rivers and harbors of the corps of engineers for review.

Final Report to Congress.

If approved by the board and Secretary of War Hurley a final report embodying the special committee recommendations will be sent to congress.

Congressional approval of this project together with the voting of necessary appropriations would give the Mississippi system of waterways a nine foot channel from the Gulf of Mexico to Minneapolis. Nine foot waterway would connect the Twin Cities and Chicago via the Illinois river.

$7,500,000 Voted for Work.

Congress last year adopted a project for a nine foot channel between the mouth of the Illinois river and Minneapolis.

The sum of $7,500,000 in addition to the amounts authorized under existing projects for the upper Mississippi was authorized to be appropriated for the prosecution of the initial works. It was further stipulated that the locks below the Twin Cities dam should be of not less than the Ohio river standard dimensions of 110 by 600.

GOOD ST. NICHOLAS, PATRON OF THE YOUNG, IS FETED IN ITALY

BARI, Italy, Dec. 6.—(AP)—St. Nicholas' day, forerunner of Christmas, was duly commemorated here this morning by old and young, the celebration centering around the handsome church where the good man's bones are supposed to be entombed.

Besides being the patron of all young folks, St. Nicholas is supposed to exert his celestial influences on behalf of merchants, sailors, bakers, and travelers.

The legend has it that merchants of Bari brought his remains here in 1097 from Myra, in Asia Minor, where he had been bishop until martyred under Diocletian. These relics are credited with miraculous properties, and until recently a certain oily substance, known as the "manna of St. Nicholas" and alleged to have remarkable healing potentialities, was supposed to flow from them.

CHICAGOLAND IS HIGH IN HONORS AT STOCK SHOW

Exhibition Ends; Farmers Return to Homes.

BY PAUL POTTER.

The fertile farms of Chicagoland maintained their supremacy over other agricultural regions represented at the International Live Stock show, which closed here last night. Like circus men, the exhibitors marched their ribbon covered prize stock into waiting trains, and the participants in a twenty acre show returned home—some of them to far away places. Attendance at the show was near last year's all time record of 500,000.

Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin, and Missouri, along with Canada, scooped up the most awards in the show, a summary of contest results indicated yesterday.

Iowa's lead was decisive, with 180 championships; Illinois was second with 161, and Indiana third with 134. Ohio's 77 high awards triumphed over Canada's 69, although stockmen and grainmen from the Dominion were represented in larger numbers than ever before. Wisconsin won 42 and Missouri 40 class premierships.

Sales of champion live stock exhibited by the boys and girls were completed yesterday, when 187 animals weighing 194,360 pounds were auctioned, netting $30,360.

Following are last night's results of the horse show, with the names of winning horses and exhibitors:

Champion harness pony stake [$1,000]—First, King of the Plain, John R. Thompson; second, The Lark, Miss Mary Gwyn Fiers; third, Little Leader, Harry Gorham. Five other winners.

Champion five gaited saddle stake [$1,000]. First, King Genous, Dixiana; second, Azara Acres, W. D. Alexander; third, Belle Frances, Herbert M. Woolf. Five other winners.

Draft horses. First, Pride, Mack, Robert, Shamrock, Victor, Johnny, owned by Union Stock Yard and Transit company; second, Wallace, Bruce, Sundial, Bachelor, Director, and Highland Lad, Wilson & Co.; third, entry of the Carnation company.

Champion roadster stake [1,000]. First, Signal Flash, George J. Peak & Son; second, Brunswick, Dixiana; third, Col. Binks, Harry Gorham. Five other winners.

18 Young Laborites Demand "Dictator" Rule for Britain

LONDON, Dec. 6.—(AP)—Eighteen prominent young Laborites tonight defied the MacDonald government by issuing a manifesto which calls for a semi-dictatorship to solve the British industrial crisis and also for postponement of the repayment of war debts.

The dictatorship plan of the eighteen, who are led by Sir Oswald Mosley, would set up five dictators instead of one, these men to act as a group to deal with the economic situation.

Interest was aroused by the war debt postponement suggestion of the manifesto, but this section was brief and did not indicate the means to be employed.

Would Reduce Taxes.

It simply said that all surplus revenue should be used to pay interest on loans for constructive works, for removal of some of the burdens on food and prime necessities of the working class, and the reduction of taxation on workers' incomes.

"Further funds should be provided for such purposes," read the manifesto, "by some postponement, until reconstruction, of the precipitate attempt to repay the war debt from taxation of this age and generation."

Among the eighteen signers are the young millionaire Socialist's wife, Lady Cynthia Mosley, and Oliver Baldwin, son of the Conservative chieftain, Stanley Baldwin. All are Laborite members of the house of commons except A. J. Cook, the fiery miners' leader, who was dubbed "Emperor Cook" during the general strike of 1926.

Calls Parliament "Incapable."

Declaring that Britain's parliamentary machinery is incapable of dealing with the present situation, Sir Oswald and his associates demand an emergency cabinet of not more than five ministers without portfolio, vested with wide powers for a stated period and subject only to the general control of parliament.

By directly challenging the Labor government, Sir Oswald and his associates—most of them young men—have staked their political careers on this, and disciplinary measures may be expected from Labor party leaders.

Just turned 34, Sir Oswald is known as "a young man in a hurry," and the destination he is aiming for is considered to be No. 10 Downing street and the premiership. He jumped into Ramsay MacDonald's ministry only to resign recently because Laborite leaders rejected his proposals to solve unemployment.

BUILDINGS BURN ON ESTATE OF W. H. MITCHELL

Damage of $25,000 was done last night by fire which swept through a barn and cottage on the hunting estate of William H. Mitchell, millionaire broker, of Lake Forest. The estate is one and a half miles southeast of Milburn, 12 miles northwest of Waukegan.

Half a doen valuable saddle horses were rescued by Clarence Smith, caretaker, and several employés of the Mitchell stables. Mr. Mitchell's home, 100 feet north of the barn, also was saved from the flames.

The fire started in the barn, which was filled with hay, and spread to the cottage. A west wind tossed burning embers away from the Mitchell home and saved it from destruction. Apparatus from Antioch and Fox Lake fought the fire, which burned for three hours.

TRIBUNE BEGINS SERIES ON CITY'S ARCHITECTURE

Pictures Show Trend for the Last Century.

(Pictures in Rotogravure Section.)

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, in its rotogravure section, today prints the first of a series of four full pages of pictures depicting the four phases in the architectural progress of Chicago. Today's pictures show the trend up to the time of the great fire in 1871, while the others will illustrate periods to the Worlds Fair, the Tribune Tower competition, and, finally, the present styles.

Architectural beginnings of our city were very humble. Considering the formidable physical obstacles which confronted the pioneers — the mud most of all — and the unprecedented rate of growth, the quality of Chicago's early architecture was unexpectedly good. Our log structures were sturdy examples of frontier craftsmanship, our streets of the thirties and forties contained good classic revival buildings, and the structures erected in the fifties and sixties, though blemished by Victorianism were no worse than elsewhere.

Along with miles of wooden shacks swept away by the great fire, Chicago lost many structures of distinction which if spared by flames and progress would have graced the streets of today.

Chicago Appreciates Architecture.

"In the years since the great war," said Eugene H. Klaber, an official of the American Institute of Architects, who designed the series for publication, "there has been a growing appreciation of architecture in Chicago. The man in the street, who previously hardly knew the names of the important buildings in the city, is today familiar with the principal architectural developments that are taking place.

"He watches the loop as it grows; and the development of Grant park, of Wacker drive, of Michigan boulevard and the near north side engage his sympathetic attention. This change in attitude of the public toward architecture was greatly stimulated, if not actually fostered, by the competition for the Tribune tower. The world-wide response to this intriguing project, and the variety and excellence of the designs presented, caused endless comment.

A Continuous History.

"What is less well known, is that the architecture of contemporary Chicago is but a link in a chain that stretches over more than a century. It is no sporadic manifestation. From the earliest days to the present day, it forms a continuous history. Various influences have affected the flow of architectural development from time to time, but it is nevertheless one continuous story. During that period the architects of Chicago have manifested a constant and progressive spirit in the design of their buildings. Skeleton steel construction had its origin here, and the resultant architecture, as well as the original thinking of such men as Louis H. Sullivan and Frank Lloyd Wright, have created a wave of influence that has spread throughout the world.

"To bring the architectural development of the last century forcibly to the attention of the public, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE will publish this series of pictures, an epitomized pictorial history of Chicago architecture. To appreciate them this will not require specialized knowledge of the art. THE TRIBUNE is being aided by the architectural profession through the committee on public information of the Chicago chapter, American Institute of Architects. Four practicing Chicago architects will prepare the material for publication.

"Earl H. Reed has prepared today's page illustrating the architecture of the early times of Chicago until the great fire."

The second of the series will appear next Sunday.

INTERESTING LETTERS

FROM BAGUIO, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

(Picture in rotogravure section.)

Letter received by Charles E. Batson, Kalamazoo, Mich.

The recipient writes:

"This letter is from the lodge of which I am a member.

"Baguio is the capital of Benguet province, in the island of Luzon, and, except for Manila, is the only incorporated city in the Philippine islands. It is situated in the mountains, about 160 miles north of Manila, and is reached by railway to Dagripan and thence by auto over the famous Baguio road or by the Naguilan trail. On the way up from the lowlands the vegetation gradually changes from pure tropical to a mixed tropical and temperate. Baguio and its region are noted for their beautiful pines.

"The city is at an elevation of 5,500 feet, and, notwithstanding its heavy rainfall [annual mean 181 inches], the climate is cool and healthful. The region has become the summer resort of the Philippines.

"Baguio has a population of 6,500, of which 200 are white. The natives in and about the city belong to the Igorote race. Telephones, electric lights, a water works, a sewage system, and an ice plant have been installed, and the city has several beautiful parks. Outside the resort trade and the native market, there is little business there. A few miles away, however, is the celebrated Benguet mine, from which considerable gold has been taken."

PRINCE PULLS HIS 'GUN'; FOES DUCK; IT'S A SNUFF BOX

BY EGBERT SWENSON.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

VIENNA, Austria, Dec. 6.—Prince Ernst Ruediger von Starhemberg, 31 year old leader of the Fascist heimwehr, who was minister of the interior in the recent shortlived cabinet of Chancellor Karl Vaugoin, but who is now elected to parliament for the first time as a member of the heimwehr bloc, had his first day in the legislature yesterday, which was quite characteristic of an impulsive Fascist.

The entrance of Prince von Starhemberg, who was dressed in a huntsman's costume, was the signal for an insulting uproar from the Socialists and left benches. Prince von Starhemberg, who had cocked one knee over the other in an nonchalent manner, suddenly made a movement toward his hip pocket.

Gun Is Silver Snuff Box.

"He has brought his gun into parliament," the Socialists roared as they ducked.

The prince contemptuously pulled out a silver snuff box.

Later amid the shouts of "Shut your mouth, loud mouthed princeling!" and "lard faced Starhemberg!" the Fascist chief began a speech in the course of which he achieved the distinction of being the first one called to order. He opened with an attack on a certain Socialist deputy as being a member of Bela Kun's bloody communist regime in Hungary following the war, declaring that he felt insulted to sit in the same parliament with this deputy.

Opens Attack on Schober.

He insisted that his own presence in parliament meant no approval of parliamentalism, adding that only the Fascist system could bring a good government to Austria.

Mid racous cries of insults from the Socialist and Centrist benches he ended his speech with an attack on Vice Chancellor Johan Schober.

AUSTRIA FREES LEVINE; FORGERY CHARGE DROPPED

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

VIENNA, Dec. 6.—Charles A. Levine, aviation enthusiast and trans-Atlantic passenger, was freed today by the public prosecutor and handed back his passport and the $7,000 bail money Mrs. Levine put up. The charge against him of counterfeiting was dropped. Before he left for Paris Mr. Levine said grimly:

"If I expressed what I think about the police and their methods they would jail me again for that."

"I am planning," he continued, "an around the world trip of 15 days alone in an airplane equipped with a new American automatic stabilizer which will allow me to fly, even while sleeping. I wanted some medallions to commemorate the flight with a globe and airplane on one side and on the reverse my picture. I chose Vienna because I could get them the cheapest. I took seven French coins to a sculptor and told him in German, 'like these.' The sculptor misunderstood and appeared to dislike me for some reason and had me jailed."

PENN U. PARTY EXPLORES MAYA RUINS BY PLANE

Photograph Location of City Lost in Jungle.

BY GREGORY MASON.

[Copyright: 1930: By the New York Times.]

MERIDA, Yucatan, Dec. 6. — The Pennsylvania university museum expedition, which has come to Yucatan for the purpose of locating and exploring lost Mayan cities by airplane, made an initial flight today and late this afternoon circled over the remains of a small group of Mayan ruins, apparently unreported heretofore, at Icilat, latitude 88 degrees 6 minutes north, longitude 20 degrees 42 minutes west. Their plane was unable to land.

Measure Lakes by Plane.

Previously the expedition established the exact location of the important ruins of Coba, which was eight miles south of the position heretofore reported. The Coba lakes were measured by airplane at a speed new to archaeology since the use of the airplane.

Six lakes hitherto unknown were discovered north of Coba. The expedition has found that Yuxana and other ruined cities were not properly located by explorers who traveled on land.

Follow Lindy's Steps.

New York, Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Headed by Percy Childs Madeira Jr. of Philadelphia, with Gregory Mason, explorer and archaeologist, as field leader, the Mayan expedition set out a few days ago in a twin motored Sikorsky airplane leased from the Pan-American Airways.

They flew via Cuba to Cosumel Island off the coast of Yucatan, and picked up the trail of ancient civilization discovered by Col. Lindbergh a year ago when he tested the aerial possibilities in this region.

Seek Lindbergh's Counsel.

The University of Pennsylvania expedition will trace with camera and on the evidences of the life and work of the Mayas. Before making their plans the members of the expedition consulted with Col. Lindbergh as to the best way of making aerial surveys.

Dr. A. V. Kidder of the Carnegie institution and Col. Lindbergh flew over the region that lies between Cozumel and the ruined city of Coba in October, 1929. Other expeditions have visited Coba on foot, but the site has not been accurately located.

In addition to Mr. Maderia and Mr. Mason, the personnel of the expedition includes J. Alden Mason, curator of the Philadelphia museum; Robert A. Smith, photographer; two pilots and a radio operator.

PLEADS INSANITY IN SLAYING OF HER LOVE RIVAL

Mrs. Josephine Kajawa yesterday told the jury in Judge G. Fred Rush's criminal court that she was temporarily insane when she shot and killed Mrs. Mary Slomba, a widow. She testified that her husband's unfaithfulness caused her to lose her mental balance and that she was not responsible for her acts on May 25, when she killed Mrs. Slomba as she was in front of 3856 Archer avenue.

Mrs. Kajawa charged that her husband, whom she had helped in the building up of a wholesale meat business, was a regular visitor to Mrs. Slomba's speakeasy before it was closed by the government.

The prosecution contends that Mrs. Kajawa was not insane and should be sent to the penitentiary.

CHICKEN THIEF SHOT BY FARMER; MAY LOSE ARM

Arthur Volz, who lives on Ogden avenue, near Aurora, was awakened early yesterday by an electric alarm installed in his henhouse in hopes of discouraging frequent visits by thieves.

Opening fire with a shotgun, he scored a direct hit on a figure he could see dimly beside the henhouse. The man ran and a second shot only increased his speed but the third charge stopped him and he was captured. He said he was Martin Peterson, 31 years old.

Late yesterday doctors in Aurora had picked 150 pellets out of Peterson and were looking for more. They said he might lose an arm. Volz found 18 hens with their necks wrung outside his henhouse.

Rehearing Refused Girl's Slayer by Supreme Court

The state supreme court yesterday refused to grant a rehearing on its recent affirmation of the sentence of John Preston of Chicago, who is scheduled to be electrocuted next Friday in Joliet penitentiary. Preston was convicted in Wheaton a year ago of the murder of Miss Agnes Johnson of Chicago, whose body was found beside a lonely road near West Chicago the morning after she and another girl had gone on a tour of roadhouses with Preston.

RUPTURE

WIFE REFUTES SUPPORT STORY; JAIL HUSBAND

John Clifford, 7023 Stony Island avenue, yesterday joined his brother, Daniel, in the Bridewell, as a result of the surprise appearance of his wife at a hearing before Judge Edgar A. Jonas in the South State street court.

The Clifford brothers and Howard Capper, disinherited son of John S. Capper, former head of Capper & Capper, were arrested recently in a department store while intoxicated. Daniel was sentenced to a year in the Bridewell when five pairs of stolen gloves were found in his pocket, and Capper went to jail because he couldn't pay a $25 fine.

John Clifford obtained a continuance on a plea that it was his first offense and that he had a wife and child to support. The wife, Mrs. Catherine Clifford of 4038 Ainslie street, appeared in court, however, and testified that Clifford left her last April and that she held a warrant for him for nonsupport.

Capper was released yesterday when he paid the fine as John Clifford started a four months' term. Daniel is serving a year.

MISSES WALLER, WHEELER MAKE DEBUTS AT BALL

A color scheme combining black and red with the chaste ivory of the Blackstone crystal room was used to transform the French ballroom into a Japanese garden last night for the first debut ball of the season. The affair was given by Mrs. Robert C. Wheeler of 1447 Astor street and Mr. and Mrs. William Waller Jr. of 45 Banks street for their daughters, Miss Winifred Wheeler and Miss Virginia Waller.

The Japanese motif was carried out by means of glossy black silhouette pagodas erected on the balcony and a border of transparent red metal trees interspersed with smaller blue ones. The balcony rail was covered with strips of Japanese redwood against an ivory silk background which matched the ivory of the walls. The ceiling of the ballroom was flooded with blue lights with a glow of amber here and there to produce a soft, cloudy effect.

The two debutantes and their parents formed a receiving line at the entrance to the ballroom before an old Chinese screen instead of the conventional smilax or floral background. Miss Waller wore a high waisted gown of green gold tissue and Miss Wheeler wore white crêpe.

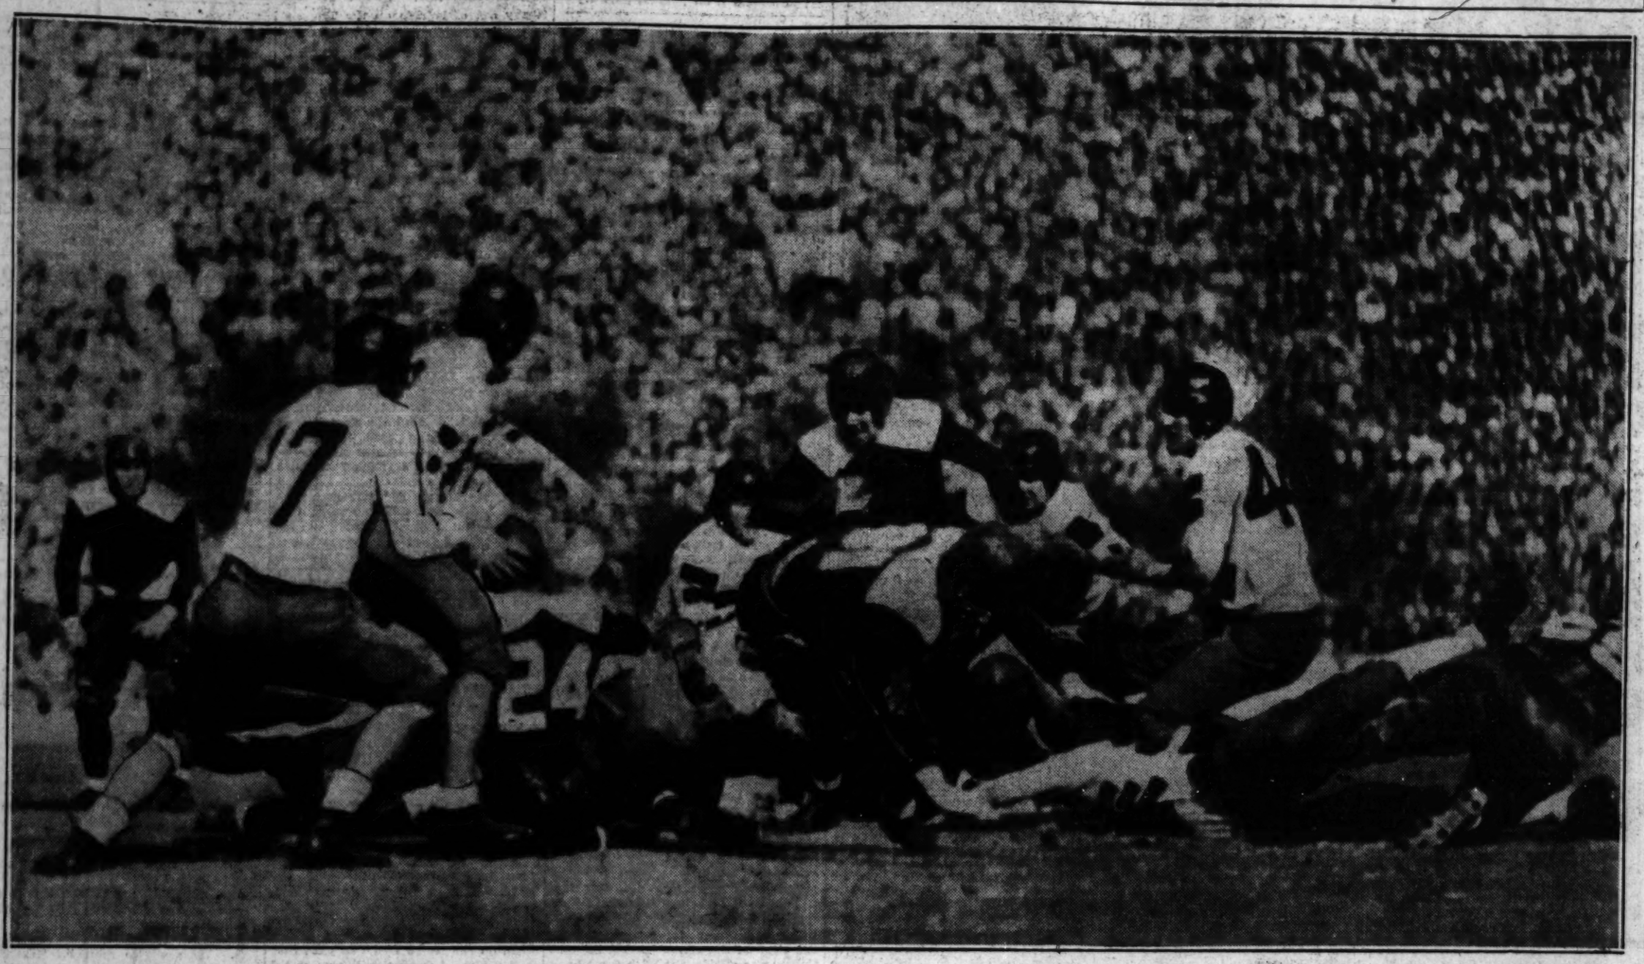
NOTRE DAME MARCHES TO NATIONAL TITLE, 27-0

WHEN THE IRISH JUGGERNAUT ROLLED OVER 19TH VICTIM



Matchmont Schwartz smashes through tackle for five yards as Notre Dame advances toward its first touchdown in yesterday's game with Southern California at Los Angeles. Culver is clearing the way. Taking the ball on its own 20 yard line at the outset of the game, Notre Dame battered its way to the Trojan 20 yard line but lost the ball when a pass was grounded in the end zone. On the next play, Culver recovered a U. S. C. fumble on the 19 yard line and then Schwartz passed to Carideo for a touchdown. A few minutes later O'Connor raced 80 yards for a second touchdown and throughout the rest of the game the issue was never in doubt.

ALLIGATOR WINS STEEPLECHASE AT GRASSLANDS

9,000 See Race for King's Cup.

BY FRENCH LANE.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Collierville, Tenn., Dec. 6.—Heart testing Grasslands Downs made its bow to international steeplechasing this afternoon. Alligator, a 12 year old thoroughbred of American origin, but the son of an Irish sire, after falling at the 21th, the next to the last jump, won the chase, the king of Spain's cup and $5,000 in added money.

He carried the blue and yellow jacket of Mrs. M. K. Stevenson of Roslyn, Long Island, to victory. Galloping gracefully over the rain washed and slippery sod, he had no trouble at the wide and narrow open ditches. He easily took the stamina trying canal type fence and after a fall which, for an instant, appeared fatal at the 22d jump he came on and ended the four and a half mile journey in 11 minutes and 1 seconds.

Alligator Finishes Alone.

Alligator was all alone as he raced over the final few hundred yards of the straightaway to the line of finish. More than 10,000 spectators, jostling, leaning, and clinging to unpainted tall wooden fences on a straightaway that extended for nearly a mile, were cheering him. For he was the 7 to 5 favorite created by the six bookmakers, who wedged their way into the crowd and quoted their odds.

Three minutes elapsed before Bally Yarn, a horse from England, which had fallen twice, came dashing up to the judges' stand to claim second honor. Then, four minutes later, old Maitland, from Austin H. Niblack's Chicago stable, with one leg hanging in a sling, it seemed, suddenly appeared on the scene, and third money went to him.

Alligator, Bally Yarn, and Maitland were the only three to finish. Each of the 17 starters went down at one time or another. Alligator was the last to fall, yet was the first to finish. Mr. C. Plumb Jr., the amateur rider who sent Alligator to his triumph, is a game boy. When Alligator went down at the 22d jump Mr. Plumb landed squarely on his face. Yet he remounted, shook up Alligator again, and as he finished blood was streaming from his nose and from cuts over both eyes.

Atterbury Is Hurt.

Casualties are everywhere in the vicinity of the Grasslands Downs course tonight. Irish Lad, a chestnut gelding from the Winding Creek Farm of Blue Ash, Ky., fell dead at the plain brush sixteenth jump and Red Gold, which represented Byron Hilliard of Kentucky, died soon after he was taken to his stable.

Red Gold went down in the spill at the Liverpool and Jockey N. Weeks, who rode him, suffered a fractured collarbone. Mr. E. Atterbury, who fell when Kilbairn sprawled at the 17th jump, an open ditch, was carried off the course and was suffering from contusions tonight. He is in a Nashville hospital.

It was the most severe test the thoroughbred had ever been put to in America. Steeplechases at Belmont Park, at Saratoga and at Arlington in Chicago, while appearing difficult at times they are run, cannot compare with the killing up and down hill trip started shortly after 2 o'clock here this afternoon.

It was a colorful scene as the thousands draped themselves over the fences while the first International steeplechase ever run in America was about to get under way.

Silver Dawn II. Sets Pace.

The six patrol judges galloped on the course and took their stations. The band played "America." Then it struck up the national anthem, Spain, the King of Spain cup, and a large bouquet of roses was carried out into the infield to the judges' stand to await the crowning of the champion.

The hunting horn sounded "going away," and the long parade to the post followed. They milled around at the post for three minutes before Starter C. J. Fitzgerald got them away. The English horse, Manamman, caused the delay.

Kentucky, ever desperate to show Tennessee its power in any test of thoroughbred strength, soon had a Kentucker out in front. It was Silver Dawn II., which represented Wilson Woodward and Hamburg Place. It soon drew away into a long lead, at one time 10 lengths in front of Mrs. E. R. McCormick's Alleviation on the rail past the judges' stand. He was 100 lengths in front of Ledigard for the Dorwood stables when he passed the judges the second time. Red Gold was running third and Bally Yarn fourth. There hadn't been a spill up to this point.

Silver Dawn II. Falls.

At the next jump things began to happen. Silver Dawn II., now 150 lengths in front, with Ledigard running second, went down. It was a bad tumble. His jockey, Mr. K. Carpenter, rolled into a ditch and neither he nor his jockey recovered sufficiently to go on along. Alleviation lost his lead and was eliminated. Rose Dunn stumbled over and was out of it. In the open ditch Bandmaster went down. At every jump from there until the finish there was a spill of some kind.

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Bruins had a close call, but managed to win out 4 to 3, in the last minute and a half of play from the Philadelphia Quakers in a National Hockey league match tonight.

The Quakers made a sensational rally in the third period to score two goals and tie the score at 3 then proceeded to hold off the former world champions, but with less than four minutes left to play, Milks and Smith went off the ice in rapid order, the former for holding and the latter for catching the disc.

Wildcats Elect Marvil 1931 Football Captain

Dallas Marvil, 240 pound tackle on the Northwestern university football team, was elected captain of the 1931 eleven at the annual football dinner of the Northwestern club of Chicago at the Stevens hotel last night. Fifteen hundred alumni attended.

DALLAS MARVIL.

Marvil, who has played regular tackle for the Wildcats during the last two years, hails from Laurel, Del., and is taking pre-medical work on the Evanston campus. He is the youngest player ever elected to the captaincy of a Northwestern football team, being only 19 years old.

President Scott Honored.

President Walter Dill Scott, who is celebrating his tenth year as head of the university, was presented with a scroll honoring him as Northwestern's most illustrious "N" man. President Scott won his letter as a member of the team of 1900. The scroll, which was presented by Capt. Hank Bruder, was signed by members of the squad.

Coach Dick Hanley, who completed his fourth season at Northwestern by winning a share of the Big Ten championship, was given a cabinet clock by the alumni and a set of golf clubs by the team.

Prof. O. F. Long, Big Ten faculty representative, presented major letter awards to 20 players and minor letters to 17. This group also was awarded gold footballs emblematic of a share of the Big Ten title. Letters were awarded to 22 members of the B team.

71 Frosh Get Numerals.

FT. WAYNE FIVE BEATS BRUINS IN OVERTIME, 20-19

Fort Wayne's professional cagers defeated the Chicago Bruins last night at the Stadium, 20 to 19, but they needed two extra five minute periods to do it. The early minutes, indeed, gave no indication of the thrilling finish which had the crowd of 2,000 standing on seats shouting imprecations at the rival players, ending with a full blown "Bronx cheer" for the referee, Chuck Salador.

With five minutes of the regular game remaining, the Bruins had a two point lead, 14 to 12. Fort Wayne broke through to tie on Saunders' basket from the free throw circle, only to have Chicago again step to the front when Allen cut free under the goal.

Once more the Hoosiers tied, this time on Meyers' shot and then took the lead for the first time since early in the second half. Saunders' one hand shot from the corner was the medium. Herlihy tied the score a few seconds later.

By this time the enthusiasm of the crowd was at boiling point. Fort Wayne secured possession of the ball at center but the game ended without the Hoosiers succeeding in getting a close-in shot and they refused to take any other.

The first five minute over time period was scoreless, although Art Bramhall failed to connect on successive drives under the basket, which would have won the game.

Once more the teams took the floor for a five minute period. Each played cautiously. With only 25 seconds remaining Meyers broke loose and scored easily under the basket.

The Bruins gathered around Referee Salador in protest. Salador called a technical foul on Chicago for delaying the game. Chadwick missed the penalty toss. Then Meyers fouled Allen as the Bruin attempted a dribble shot and Allen stepped to the free throw line for two free throws. He missed the first, however, and the second throw, although successful, only gave Chicago another point, for which they had no use.

WHAT COAST'S CRITICS THINK OF IRISH TRIUMPH

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Here is what the Los Angeles newspaper writers, all of whom picked Southern California to win before today's game, say about Notre Dame's 27 to 0 victory.

Jack James, Evening Herald—The hitherto mighty Trojans were outclassed in every department. The Irish rambled through an apparently futile defense for a superiority that was every bit as one sided as the score.

Sid Ziff, Evening Express—It was a whirlwind, not a football game. The Trojans were completely outclassed and bewildered. A great exhibition of team coördination and individual brilliance.

Bill Henry, Los Angeles Times—It's a shame, a dirty shame, when a coach loses all his really good players, and has to fall back on "bums" like this fellow, Bucky O'Connor. Poor old Rockne. It certainly was tough to have nobody better than O'Connor in there. I presume that if Savoldi had been in there, instead of running 80 yards for a touchdown he would not have stopped this side of Santa Monica. There have been football teams of considerable fame appear in these parts in the last 20 years, and I saw or wrote about every one of them, but there never has been a team with the speed, precision, and alertness of that crippled gang that poor old, mournful Knute turned loose.

Mark Kelly, Los Angeles Examiner—It's the greatest football team that ever came to Los Angeles. Frank Carideo was a symphony in leather. The team was good enough to completely dominate the Trojans. And everybody knows the Trojans are no setup for any football team.

Paul Lowry, Los Angeles Times—The Irish team today added a chapter to gridiron history. Pulling the strings of battle, Knute Rockne unleashed a powerful running and passing attack that baffled and bewildered the Trojans at every stage and far surpassed the exhibition of the famous Four Horsemen which beat Stanford, 27 to 10, at Pasadena in 1925.

ADMIRERS GIVE LIPTON "GOOD LOSER" TROPHY

New York, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The spirit which brought Sir Thomas Lipton across the ocean on so many vain quests for the America's cup showed itself today as he sailed with the "good loser" trophy given him by admiring Americans.

"I'm out for another cup, you know," he told reporters with a grin.

He declared again that he would be back to try once more to bear the pick of American yachts. The aged sportsman, who grew faint during the city hall reception Thursday, said that, while he wasn't "ready to tackle Dempsey," he felt much better today.

"You Played Greatest Game of Year," Rockne Tells Team

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 6.—"The boys played the greatest ball game of the year."

That was all Coach Knute Rockne had to say this evening about Notre Dame's 27-0 triumph over the University of Southern California football team this afternoon.

But that was enough, for to those who consider this year's Irish eleven the greatest that has ever represented Notre Dame, the statement implied that they had seen the outstanding football game, not only of the season, but of all time.

Coach Howard Jones of the Trojan eleven and Marshall Duffield, his acting captain and quarter back, confirmed that opinion.

"We were beaten by a better football team," Coach Jones said, as he stood in the dressing room watching his squad, hailed as the best of all Southern California teams, dress after the game. "It was the greatest Notre Dame eleven I have ever seen. Rock should be proud of his squad. They were well drilled, blocked well, and were not bad on forward passes, either."

He added the latter statement with an appreciative look that indicated the Notre Dame passing attack, in his opinion, was all that any could be.

Duffield went even farther than Jones in his praise of the conquerers.

"It was the greatest ball club I have ever seen," the Trojan quarter said. "They were big, tall, and fast men. It looked like we were a bunch of green kids, playing against an experienced eleven."

It remained for Capt. Tom Conley of the Irish to reveal how Bucky O'Connor, the substitute half back, was made over into a full back in two days to replace the injured Moon Mullins. O'Connor, playing his first game at full, dashed 80 yards through the Trojans in the first quarter to score one touchdown and then added another marker in the third period on a lateral pass.

"Rockne made him over from a half back to a full back in secret practice at Tucson two days ago," Conley told an admiring throng that gathered around him as he slipped out of his hip pads and into his trousers. "He and Moon Mullins were pals and when Mullins got injured Rock told O'Connor to go in there and do what Mullins would have done, for Mullins' sake."

What Bucky did for Moon's sake is already football history.

Frank Carideo, regarded by many as the peer of all quarter backs ever developed by Rockne, was slightly injured in the third quarter and delegated some of the punting work to Marchy Schwartz after that. He stayed in the lineup, however, until the final three minutes of the game and as he trotted off the field he received a roar of acclaim from both Southern California and Notre Dame rooters.

The cheers for Carideo were matched by those given to Duffield

What Coast Grid Coaches Thought About Notre Dame

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 6.—From every corner of the press stand, where the country's leading football coaches were seated, came paeans for the Notre Dame team today. At first the group of coaches was a bit backward in giving opinion, but when half time was reached it was a different story.

Pop Warner broke the ice. Stanford's famous coach stopped on his way to a radio booth to tell the scribes what he thought.

"Smartest defense I have seen in years and a great offense," Warner said. "Why, U. S. C. seems to have practically no defense for those passes."

Ed (Slip) Madigan, former Notre Dame star and now coach of St. Mary's, was next.

"Why, there is nothing to it out there; Carideo is the class. That fellow reads the mind of the eleven Trojan players and then just does the opposite."

Other opinions gathered from coaches who are known from coast to coast:

Dick Templeton, Stanford track coach: "The Notre Dame team simply took the strength out of the Trojan running attack. Imagine U. S. C. passing from their own 20 yard line in the early part of the game. The Notre Dame line outplayed them all the way."

Bill Spaulding, U. C. L. A. coach: "Notre Dame has the smoothest running team I have seen in years. Gee, but those off tackle plays and passes were great."

Herb Dana, coast football official: "The Notre Dame line outplayed U. S. C. all the way. Carideo is a great field general. He seemed to call the right plays all the time."

Buck Bailey, assistant coach at Washington State: "Great team that South Bend outfit. Always on the alert. They looked good at all times."

Babe Hollingbery, coach of the Washington State team that beat U. S. C. 7 to 6: "Fine football team; one of the smartest I ever saw."

Tom Lieb, coach of Loyola university, Los Angeles, and last year's assistant coach to Rockne: "Notre Dame won because the Irish line completely outplayed the Trojans throughout the game. Hunk Anderson, line coach, deserves a world of credit. Ends, tackles, guards, and centers, all outclassed their opponents. Hunk's men played their positions perfectly. It was due to their smart, aggressive charging that the Irish won. Southern California didn't have a real chance to score all afternoon. The Notre Dame backs were faster and apparently smarter, and obviously much more alert. The number of intercepted passes indicate the way they were following the ball. I thought Bob Hall was the only Trojan lineman who played up to form. Carideo called a perfect game."

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 6.—The detailed account of Notre Dame's 27 to 0 victory over Southern California in the Coliseum here today follows:

FIRST QUARTER.

Carideo won the toss and elected to receive, defending the east goal. With Duffield holding the ball, Baker kicked off to Schwartz, who caught the ball on his goal line and returned it to the 20 yard line. Schwartz cut off his right guard for 3 yards, Hall stopping him. On a spinner and a lateral pass, Schwartz to O'Connor, the ball was advanced to the 44 yard line for a first down. Schwartz went through center for 4 more.

Shaw stopped Schwartz at the line for no gain. Schwartz backed up and tossed a pass to Conley, who caught the ball and stepped out of bounds on the Trojan 29 yard line. Schwartz made 4 yards off right tackle. Brill was smothered by three men as he hit his left tackle. A double pass, Schwartz to O'Connor, made it fourth down and 1 yard to go. The Trojans took the ball when Schwartz's pass to O'Brien was grounded over the goal line.

A minute later Musick fumbled on his 19 yard line and Culver recovered. The Trojans took time out.

Carideo Scores on Pass.

Schwartz passed to Carideo, who caught the ball on the 10 yard line and ran across the goal line untouched. The play started as an off tackle smash. Carideo kicked goal. Score: Notre Dame, 7; Southern California, 0.

Carideo kicked off to Duffield, who caught the ball on his 10 yard line and returned it to the 26 yard line. Musick went through center for six yards. Notre Dame took time out. Pinckert made one yard on a reverse through his left tackle. Duffield's quick kick was caught by Carideo, who returned the ball 12 yards to the 27 yard line.

Schwartz gained 5 yards on a delayed center buck. O'Connor punctured his right guard for a first down on the Notre Dame 37 yard line. Hall stopped Schwartz after a one yard gain. O'Connor made two yards off left guard. Schwartz's long pass was incomplete. He tried to pass to O'Brien. Carideo punted out of bounds on the Trojans' 28 yard line. It was good for 32 yards. Duffield went through his left tackle for 7 yards. Trojans took time out.

Metzger Stops Musick.

Musick hit center for no gain. Metzger was in his way. Duffield carried the ball out of bounds for a two yard gain but Notre Dame was offside and it was first down following the 5 yard penalty. Duffield's pass to Joslin was good, and Brill ran him out of bounds on the Notre Dame 41 yard line. Duffield gained three off his right tackle and hit the same spot on the next play for three more. On a reverse Joslin made one yard through right tackle.

On a bad pass from center, the ball missed Duffield by yards. He raced back picked up the oval on the 40 yard line and as O'Brien attempted to tackle him he punted the ball over the Notre Dame goal line. The ball did not travel more than ten feet above the ground. O'Connor went through his right tackle and got loose. He was almost run out of bounds at the 40 yard line but kept inside and continued to a touchdown. Pinckert and Duffield both failed to tag O'Connor. Carideo failed to kick goal. Score: Notre Dame, 13; Southern California, 0.

The period ended there. Score: Notre Dame, 13; Southern California, 0.

SECOND QUARTER.

Mohler returned the kickoff 24 yards. Mohler lost 2 yards on a line play, but gained nine on the next play, a spinner through left guard. Notre Dame was offside on the next play and it was first down on the 36 yard line. Kosky replaced O'Brien and Hanley

SCHMELING MUST BATTLE STADIUM WINNER—N. B. A.

Meet Stribling or Griffith, Is Ultimatum.

Brig. Gen. John V. Clinnin, president of the National Boxing association, announced last night that the world heavyweight championship will be declared vacated if Max Schmeling, the present champion, does not sign to fight the winner of the Stribling-Griffith fight at the Chicago Stadium.

The Chicago fight will be held on Dec. 12, which happens to be the exact date on which Schmeling will have been a champion six months without defending his title, acquired when he was fouled by Jack Sharkey.

Expect Stribling to Win?

While Gen. Clinnin did not say as much, it is indicated that the plans of the association in fixing the championship status are built somewhat on the expectancy that Stribling will defeat Griffith.

"I believe, and I understand the National Boxing association believes, that Stribling is the ranking challenger of Schmeling and as such is entitled to a chance to win the championship by defeating Max," Gen. Clinnin said.

"Stribling's father, who is his manager, has posted $5,000 forfeit with the stipulation that he stands ready to raise the amount if required by Joe Jacobs, Schmeling's manager.

Title May Be Vacated in N. Y.

"Under the rules of the New York commission, which is not a member of the N. B. A., the championship automatically is vacated if Schmeling doesn't sign before Dec. 12. I as president of the N. B. A. do not care to take such an arbitrary stand. In the eyes of the association Schmeling will continue as the champion until he had declined to fight the winner of the Stribling-Griffith fight. But he'll have to accept or decline within a few days after the winner of the coming Stadium fight is determined.

"I have communicated with the 30 state commissions which belong to the N. B. A., as well as the commissions in Canada, Mexico, Italy, Great Britain and France, which are affiliated with the association. I am given to understand that these commissions will insist that Schmeling fight the winner of the Stribling-Griffith match, and will make the edict one of the most sweeping orders of the N. B. A., since the action will embody the specific instructions of the several groups."

Friday night's appearance will be Stribling's 294th fight and he will be seeking his 129th knockout victory. He is eager to eliminate Griffith as a heavyweight contender and take a place as the logical opponent for Schmeling next summer.

Tuffy's Big Chance.

Still the fight promises less for Stribling than Griffith, who has the greatest opportunity of his career. Stribling, by his knockouts of Otto Von Porat and Phil Scott and his two fights against Carnera, has a high place among the contenders, while Tuffy has not achieved the rating that the Southerner enjoys.

The fight is certain to be a financial success, according to Stadium officials.

While the drawing power of Stribling and Griffith rates high in Chicago, the presence of the famous Ma and Pa Stribling, W. L. III., young son of the fighter, and Herbert, W. L.'s brother, at the ringside has abetted the enthusiasm. Herbert will appear on the card, boxing Irish Kennedy in a six round preliminary.

Gagnon Meets Johnson.

Further interest is manifest in the ten round semi-windup, in which Jack Gagnon, the conqueror of Griffith meets Tuffy's stablemate, Larry Johnson.

The card will bring back Frank Cawley, Tommy Loughran's stablemate, who has lost but one fight in three years. His bout with Al Fay was stopped in the third round on the Walker-Loughran card at the Stadium two years ago when he suffered the rupture of a blood vessel in his mouth. Just recently Cawley has defeated Tom Heeney, Pete Latzo, Rugiello, and Babe Hunt. He will meet Natie Brown Friday.

KING'S CUP IS STEEPLECHASE PRIZE

Mrs. James B. Thomas of New York and J. Stanley Reeves of Philadelphia admire the engraved gold cup, donated by Alphonso XIII., king of Spain, which was first prize in the Grasslands International steeplechase yesterday at Grasslands Downs, Tenn. The race was won by Alligator, owned by Mrs. Maud K. Stevenson of Roslyn, N. Y. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

sort. A few recovered in time to continue the journey.

But a desperate horse race was now taking place. Two of the stoutest hearted of the 17 starters waging a fight of life and death as the field reached the 20th jump. They were Alligator, which had been doing his work easily, taking his jumps like a big flying machine and who had been enjoying a breathing spell here and there. He was racing head and head with Waverly Star, another entry from England, which now was threatening to carry away the big prize.

They were head and head as they reached the 25th jump. Two tired horses were trying with all their might. Two desperate jockeys were fighting and calling on their mounts for more speed and courage.

Spill at 25th.

They hit the 25th jump in this fashion. Water soaked red clay was the landing spot. For some reason there was no reassuring grass covered sod on which to land.

Waverly Star on the outside went down first. He rolled over and didn't come up. Aligator also slipped and fell. But he was on his feet in an instant. Jockey Plumb dug himself out of the mud, wiped the mud off his smashed nose and battered eyes, climbed back into the saddle and kicked his horse home in front.

Perhaps this race which found one horse beating another by three minutes, with the third horse four minutes back of the two leaders, does not strike you as spectacular. In a steeplechase of this sort the sensational events take place long before the finish line is reached.

He's a Noted Jumper.

While Alligator hasn't won many races this year he previously had established himself as one of the great jumpers of the times. Last year he won the Meadowbrook cup, the New Jersey hunt cup, the Maryland hunt cup and the Rose Tree challenge cup, all run in the east and over very jumping courses. These were amateur races and Alligator never started as a professional until he looked over at Starter Fitzgerald waving the flag this afternoon.

He never lost heart in Grasslands' inaugural. At times he was nearly a quarter of a mile back of the leaders. He did not begin to improve his position until the last turn around the course started. Then he came up in magic stride, challenged one horse after another, finally fell at the 25th jump, but wasn't so badly stunned he could not go on and finish out a good day's work.

This was the first brush course Alligator ever ran over. Less than 10 days ago he was schooled over the brush jumps at Belmont Park. That was the only lesson he received until he won today's steeplechase. He was purchased by Mrs. M. K. Stevenson for a ladies' hunter six years ago.

GEORGETTI AND BROCARDO WIN N. Y. BIKE RACE

New York, Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Riding to maintain a lead of one lap they held for the closing 23 hours of the grind, Franco Georgetti and Paul Brocardo, Italian cyclists, tonight won the 49th international six day bicycle race which closed in Madison Square Garden before a crowd of 10,000 fans.

Roger De Nef and Adolf Charlier, Belgian newcomers to New York grinds, finished second, a lap back of Georgetti and Brocardo.

In scoring their victory, Georgetti and Brocardo pedaled 2,666 miles 9 laps, a new record for 146 hour six day races. De Nef and Charlier covered 2,666 miles and 8 laps. The fact that Georgetti and Brocardo enjoyed a one lap advantage nullified the fact that the De Nef-Charlier combination had 1,265 tallies against 274 for Georgetti and Brocardo.

Another record which went by the boards was the mark for stolen laps during the progress of the event. The teams pilfered 683 laps, displacing the record of 623 made three weeks ago in the Chicago race.

The order of finish:

	Miles	Laps.	Points.
Georgetti-Brocardo	2,666	9	274
De Nef-Charlier	2,666	8	125
Linari-Binda	2,666	7	672
Bellani-Richilli	2,666	7	283
Peden-Crossley	2,666	6	451
Deulberg-Debets	2,666	2	350
Leisegang-Walker	2,666	2	178
McNamara-Beckman	2,665	7	324

Haskell Indians Run Over University of Tulsa, 34-7

Tulsa, Okla., Dec. 6.—(AP)—The previously undefeated University of Tulsa eleven was trampled here today by Haskell Indian institute of Lawrence, Kas., 34 to 7. Led by Louis [Little Rabbit] Weller, Haskell counted touchdowns in rapid order after the first period. Buster Charles, running mate of Weller, ran 92 yards for a touchdown after receiving a kickoff.

In the WAKE of the NEWS

FOOTBALL EMPHASIS.

ACTION of Loyola university in abolishing intercollegiate football was surprising. It was the more surprising since Loyola had just completed its most ambitious schedule. It also had installed electric lights at its stadium for night football. Night football ever is an appeal for public patronage.

The Wake does not question Loyola's decision. Emphasis or overemphasis of football always has seemed to us a question for each college or university to determine for itself. There is no question that in some institutions football is the main "business" of the fall semester. At other places restrictive measures go to the other extreme. Football on a basis of equality with natural rivals either is worth having or it is not worth having at all.

Most football evils, if any, arise from demand for a winner. We never have quarreled with the question of gate receipts, no matter how large. Admitting that many contests are scheduled which would not be scheduled except for gate receipts because of the prominence of the opposing eleven, we still feel that football profits, in the main, are wisely spent on other competitive sports or for the undergraduate body.

Demand for a winner is something that probably never will be eliminated. The conference, or Big Ten, has a problem of that kind. Purdue, beaten in an early game by one point after touchdown, earned nearly $100,000 less in gate receipts than was estimated. Other sports will be curtailed as a result. Purdue by that early season defeat was "out" of the running for an unofficial championship—the Big Ten does not officially recognize a championship.

Such a condition arises for some eleven nearly every year where teams are as evenly matched as those of the Big Ten and where they play five or six conference opponents each season. We'd rather see each team play only three conference rivals and fill in with nonconference opponents. Then a championship rating would be impossible. Manifestly that is unlikely, because one of the conference purposes is to encourage combats between its own members. There also would be other disadvantages. But the public desire for a champion has subordinated many natural and traditional rivalries to the "title" discussion.

Football has been under drastic attack before. It is always under more or less attack. In the past some colleges have abolished or curtailed football for a period of years. Loyola's example may find followers. Football, in the past, has always "come back," either in the same form or with restrictive safeguards. We'll even be curious to see whether Loyola itself is without collegiate football competition ten years from now.

So our viewpoint is that football, with some admitted evils, will survive, if it follows precedent, by the good judgment of its sponsors who recognize the points urged against it by its enemies.

Sleighbells.

I would like to hear the music
Of the days so long ago . . .
Chiming, merry chiming sleighbells,
O'er the moonlit sparkling snow.

I would change this prosy diction,
Years imposed, for happy rhyme . .
Rhythm timed to youth and laughter
And the bells at Christmas time.

I am irked by ruthless burdens
Time decrees that I should bear . . .
Yet time cannot steal the treasures
Memory holds so dear and fair.

Christmas time and chimes of sleigh bells,
Reverie can bless one so . . .
Chiming, singing, ever bringing Back the joys one used to know.

plays with lateral passes which demoralized the Trojans.

The Trojans once penetrated to the 21 yard line, but this was in the final minute of play after Beatty, a fresh, fast Trojan quarter back, launched the Trojans' only sustained attack of the day against a combination of Rockne's second and third string.

Reach 21 Yard Line.

The Los Angeles team entered the Notre Dame territory only three times, once to the 33 yard line in the first quarter, once to the 34 yard line in the third quarter, and Beatty ending with a desperate attack of interspersed tackle slashes and passes which halted at the 21 yard line at the final gun.

Taking the ball on a fumble by Full Back Musick of the Trojans, a pass, Schwartz to Carideo, put over the first touchdown from Southern California's 19 yard line in the eleventh minute of play.

The all-American Italian spurted out around the Trojan left end, who was boxed out of the play, and scampered, chased only by one Trojan, to the goal. Carideo added the extra point with a place kick. Within three minutes Notre Dame's unending pressure paved the way to the second score. On a bad pass from center on his own 33 yard line, Duffield scooped the bobbling ball, took a quick look at the end and half back bearing down on him on his own 45 yard line, and quickly kicked it over his own goal.

The Trojans' howl of glee over this quick witted action had not died down when Notre Dame, lining up, shot Schwartz, Brill, and Carideo over the position of Bob Hall, six foot four inch Trojan tackle, and O'Connor, the dark horse full back, rode through the opening on an eighty yard dash for a touchdown.

O'Connor slanted over to the north side of the Coliseum field to escape the charging half back and Trojan right end, cutting over to head him off. Seemingly cornered by Half Back Apsit at the side line, O'Connor sidestepped Apsit, cut back into the field, and with his own powerful interferers galloping up to take up the remaining Trojan, scampered the last fifty yards free from molestation.

Irish Lose Touchdown.

Carideo missed his goal. After missing another touchdown toward the close of the second period because Culver was offside, the Irish came back to score again early in the third period.

Schwartz took the ball from his own 30 yard line to Southern California's 12 yard line in two efforts, with Brill contributing a 3 yard line gain. A 5 yard offside penalty advanced the oval to the 7 yard line and the Irish nearly lost the ball when O'Connor fumbled. However, he recovered and on the next play took a lateral pass from Schwartz and eluded three tacklers on his way across the goal. Carideo kicked goal.

The fourth touchdown, coming in the last four minutes of play, was engineered by the combined second and third string, with Jaskwich replacing Carideo and Lukats in at half for Schwartz. A triple pass, starting as a double spinner, got things under way with Lukats passing to a second Irish speeder, who spun in turn and passed laterally to Carideo. It gained 24 yards from the forty-three yard line.

Lukats Goes Over.

Lukats fumbled a lateral, but, like all Notre Dame's apparent misplays today, this merely redounded to the team's credit, for Hanley recovered Lukats' fumble, and when Notre Dame was held for downs Mohler tried a desperate Southern California pass from his own 20 yard line. Hanley intercepted, however. Then Dan bucked twice to the eleven yard line, and from there Lukats drove through a hole as big as a roundhouse in the left side of the Trojan line.

Jaskwhich's place kick for extra point was partly deflected by a California linesman, but it slid up off the charger's fingertips true through the goal posts for the final score of the game.

HOOVER WATCHES MARINES DEFEAT COAST GUARD, 7-0

Washington, D. C., Dec. 6.—(AP)—President Hoover today took the afternoon off and saw the marine corps football team defeat the Coast Guard, 7 to 0, in a charity game attended by approximately 20,000.

The President left the White House after an early lunch and arrived at Griffith stadium half an hour before the game began in order to witness an intricate drill executed by 1,200 Quantico marines.

The President's cup, for which the teams play annually, was presented to the Marine Corps after the game by President Hoover.

The Marines scored in the third quarter when Gatko, half back, ran 69 yards from scrimmage. Robertson, whose punting helped the Devil Dogs throughout, converted the extra point. Save for Gatko's dash the teams fought on even terms.

MINNESOTA FIVE BEATS S. DAKOTA STATE, 59 TO 21

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Minnesota university's basketball team opened its season tonight by scoring a 59 to 21 victory over South Dakota State at the Gopher fieldhouse.

South Dakota's group of green material offered little or no opposition to Dave MacMillan's cagers, and while they looked good at times their play was ragged throughout the game.

Minnesota started out rather slowly, but at half time held a 30 to 8 lead. Lineup:

Hanley could find no hole in the line and Notre Dame was penalized 15 yards for holding. It was third down and nineteen to go. Carideo passed to Hanley, who crossed the goal line at the corner of the field unmolested when the lone Trojan defense player, Apsit, was pinned between two South Bend players.

Carideo returned Shaver's punt 30 yards to midfield as the half ended. Score: Notre Dame, 13; Southern California, 0.

A cheer went up when Notre Dame supporters saw Moon Mullins trot onto the field at full back. Duffield was back at quarter for Southern California.

Duffield took the kickoff on his 6 yard line and brought it back to the 23 yard line. Duffield's pass was incomplete. On the next play he sent a quick kick out of bounds on the Notre Dame 30 yard line.

Mullins failed to gain in a punch through his right guard. O'Connor replaced Mullins. Schwartz carried the ball off right tackle for a first down on the Notre Dame 42 yard line. Brill squirmed three yards through his left tackle. Schwartz finally was brought down on a dash through his right tackle on the Trojans' 12 yard line. Pinckert ran him down.

Brill failed to gain but the Trojans were offside and it was first down on the 7 yard line. O'Connor fumbled but recovered on the 8 yard line. Following a lateral pass from Schwartz to O'Connor crossed the goal line. Clarke replaced Arbelbide, who was injured on the play. Carideo kicked the goal from placement. Score: Notre Dame, 20; Southern California, 0.

Pinckert took Carideo's kick and brought it back from his ten yard line to the 34 yard line where Brill tackled him. Two Notre Dame men knocked down Duffield's long pass to Clarke. Notre Dame was penalized for interfering with Duffield's pass and it was the Trojan's ball on their 46 yard line. Musick went through right guard for one yard.

Duffield passed to Pinckert, who was downed as he caught the ball on the Notre Dame 37 yard line. Musick ploughed through center for 3 yards.

STATISTICS SHOW SUPERIORITY OF ATTACK OF IRISH

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 6.—The statistical record of the Notre Dame-Southern California game tonight revealed the secret of the Irish victory over the Trojans, the host from Notre Dame completely outclassing the Californians in attack.

The Irish gained a total of 433 yards to 175 for the Trojans, 355 coming from rushes through the line and around end, while 77 were gained by passes. Southern California gained only 95 yards by rushing and 46 on passes.

Only in punting did the Trojans hold a slight edge, their kicks averaging 46.4 yards to 36.4 yards for the Irish. The alertness of Notre Dame was shown in the recovery of fumbles. Notre Dame fumbled twice and recovered both of them, and, while Southern California dropped the ball only once, the Irish pounced on it to gain possession on the 19 yard line early in the first quarter and their first touchdown followed immediately. Irish Win U. S. Trophy

NOTRE DAME'S overwhelming victory over Southern California yesterday not only gave the Irish the National football title, under the Dickinson rating system, but won Knute Rockne's warriors permanent possession of the Rissman National Intercollegiate trophy. Permanent possession required winning the national title three times within a decade.

Conley intercepted Duffield's next pass and brought it back along his first sideline 20 yards to the Notre Dame 49 yard line. O'Connor carried the ball out of bounds for a 3 yard gain.

Schwartz Makes First Down.

Schwartz went to a first down on the Trojans' 40 yard line on a delayed buck through right tackle. O'Connor went four yards through left tackle. Hall replaced Plaehm. O'Connor made two at left tackle. O'Connor's pass over the line to O'Brien took the ball to the 25 yard line. Schwartz was stopped for a half yard gain. Brill gained 3 yards around left end. Schwartz's pass to O'Brien was incomplete making it fourth down and 7 yards to go.

Carideo calmly punted out of bounds at the 5 yard line. Musick punctured his right guard for 5 yards. Carideo was run out of bounds as he caught Duffield's punt on the Notre Dame 45 yard line. Notre Dame took time out. Mohler went in at quarter back for Duffield and Shaver replaced Musick. Carideo was injured but stayed in the game following a rest. Mohler dented Notre Dame's right guard for 2 yards. Shaver made 4 yards over his right tackle. Notre Dame took time out. Pinckert took the ball four yards over his right guard for a first down on his own 41 yard line as the period ended.

FOURTH QUARTER.

Mohler made a yard through right guard. Notre Dame was offside on the next play, and it was the Trojans' second down on their 46 yard line. Mohler passed over the line straight into the hands of O'Brien who returned the ball to the Trojans' 49 yard line. A 3 yard forward toss behind the line, Schwartz to O'Brien, was followed by Schwartz's gallop out of bounds on the Southern California 23 yard line. Notre Dame took time out. Conley received a cheer when he left the field. He was replaced at right end by Vik.

A back field pass, Schwartz to O'Connor was fumbled by O'Connor and then scooped up by him as he ran out of bounds with a two yard loss. With a five man interference, O'Connor galloped around left end to the 7 yard mark, but the ball was brought back because Notre Dame was offside and was penalized 5 yards.

Schwartz Passes to Hanley.

The penalty was for back field in motion. Kaplan replaced Brill and Hanley replaced O'Connor. Schwartz passed to Hanley who ran to the 17 yard line before he was downed. Schwartz's pass was knocked down in the end zone and it was the Trojan's ball on their 20 yard line. Shaver failed to gain through the line. Mohler went 4 yards through his right tackle. Mohler hit his own right guard for six yards.

Shaver brought the ball back five yards to his 32 yard line. Mohler failed to gain on an attempted right tackle dash. Shaver's pass to Mohler was complete but Mohler lost a yard. Shaver's pass to Clarke was knocked down. Clark knocked Shaver's punt out of bounds on the Notre Dame 19 yard line.

A double back field pass, the last one from Kosky to Carideo, netted a gain to the 43 yard line. Lukats made 3 yards through center. A lateral pass was fumbled and recovered by Hanley with a one yard loss. Jaskwich replaced Carideo for Notre Dame. Mohler made a fair catch of Jaskwich's punt on the Trojans' 12 yard line. Notre Dame again broke up Mohler's interference after a 2 yard run around left end.

Hanley intercepted Shaver's pass on the 21 yard line. Hanley made three yards at center and five on the next play. Lukats broke through his right tackle and dived across the goal line for another touchdown. Jaskwhich kicked goal. Score: Notre Dame, 27; Southern California, 0.

Final score: Notre Dame, 27; Southern California, 0.

BY EDWARD BURNS.

The Chicago Blackhawks are a little touchy in the matter of implications that they have been playing over their heads thus far in their National Hockey league schedule.

So tonight they are going to do their darndest, so they promise, to give the Detroit Falcons a severe spanking, even though they don't need the victory to retain their top position in the National league standings.

Gottselig in Hospital.

The boys will be obliged to carry out their devastation plan without the services of Johnny Gottselig, their leading scorer, who will undergo an operation on his throat at St. Luke's hospital this afternoon. Johnny will not return to the ice for about a week.

We haven't seen the Falcons play and we'll not attempt to make the fans believe we are familiar with the cast. But we have an expert right here at the microphone, folks, who is willing to speak to you for a few hours on the Detroit personnel.

Mr. Joseph C. Farrell now is speaking:

"One of the most complete and sweeping pieces of rebuilding in the entire history of the National Hockey league has been accomplished by chubby, smiling Jack Adams, pilot of the Detroit crew.

Introducing Two More Lions.

"George Hay, Larry Aurie, and Bert McInenly will be on the second line with Jimmy Creighton. Herbie Lewis, and Stan McCabe available for duty on the third line.

"Defensively much of the Falcons' hopes rest upon the capable shoulders of the old timer, Reg Noble."

The Shamrocks' next home game will be against the Duluth Hornets Tuesday night at the Chicago Stadium. The Hornets twice licked the Shamrocks, 1 to 0, at the opening of the American Hockey league season. As a consequence the Shamrocks are forecasting the most spirited fight that has been staged in the American league season to date.

The Hornets are coached by Shorty Green, former manager and coach of the New York Americans, and three former National leaguers are with the troupe. They are Charley Langlois, Red Green, and Laurie Scott.

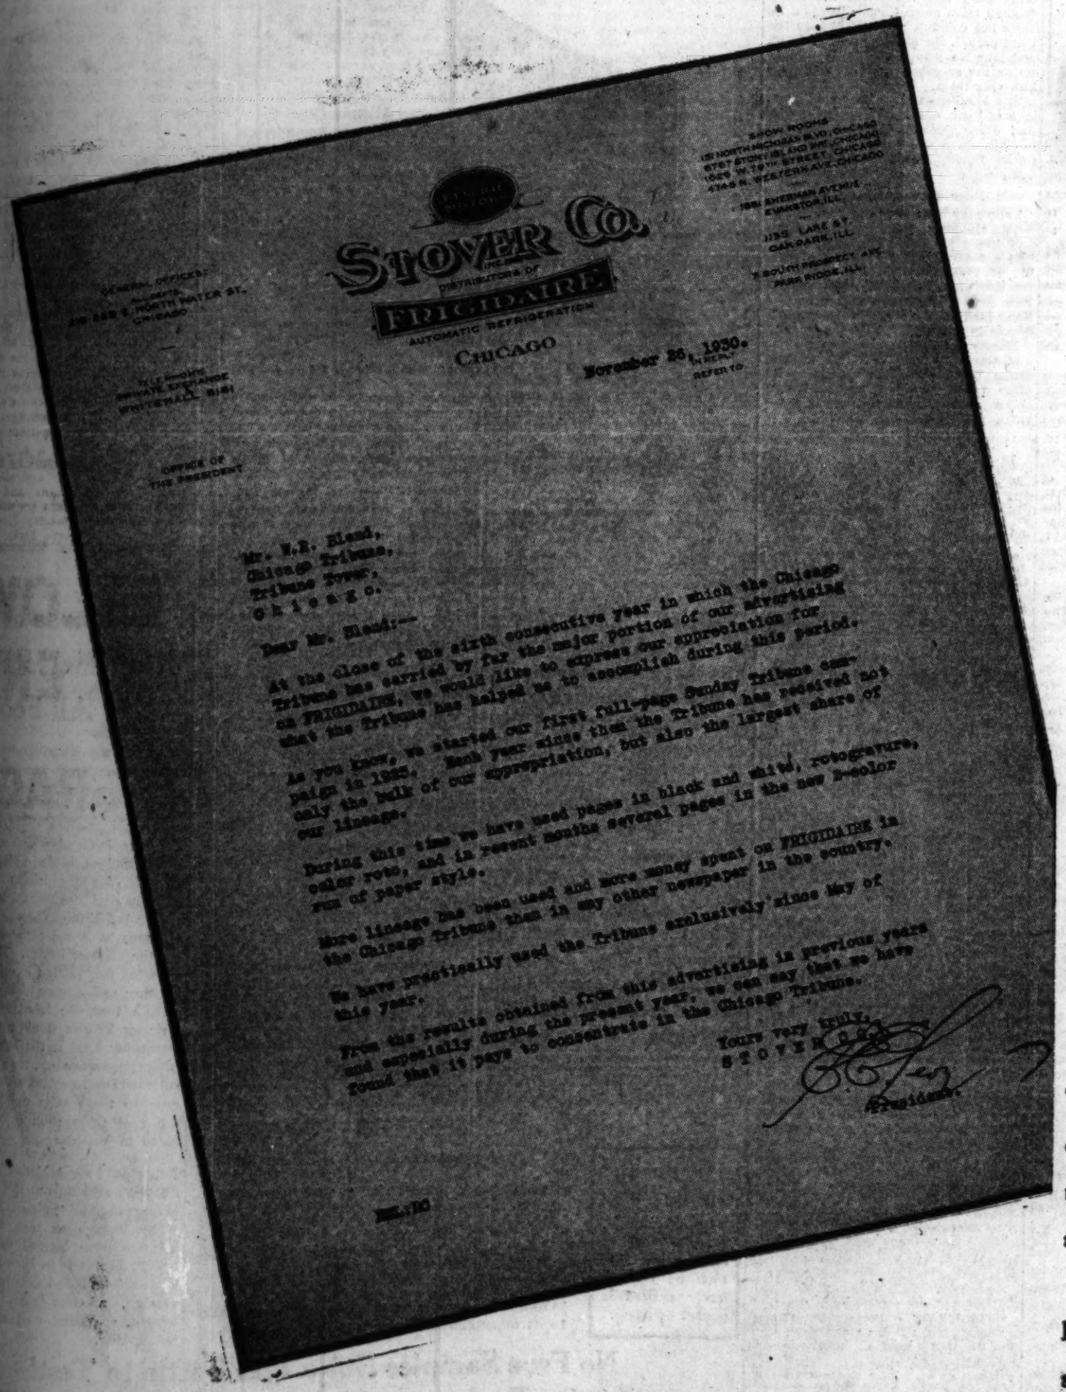
FRIGIDAIRE concentrates in the Chicago Tribune



STOVER CO.
DISTRIBUTORS OF FRIGIDAIRE
AUTOMATIC REFRIGERATION
CHICAGO

November 26, 1930.

Mr. E.E. Hand,
Chicago Tribune,
Tribune Tower,
Chicago.

Dear Mr. Hand:—

At the close of the sixth consecutive year in which the Chicago Tribune has carried by far the major portion of our advertising on FRIGIDAIRE, we would like to express our appreciation for what the Tribune has helped us to accomplish during this period.

As you know, we started our first full-page Sunday Tribune campaign in 1925. Each year since then the Tribune has received not only the bulk of our appropriation, but also the largest share of our lineage.

During this time we have used pages in black and white, rotogravure, color roto, and in recent months several pages in the new Duplex run of paper style.

More lineage has been used and more money spent on FRIGIDAIRE in the Chicago Tribune than in any other newspaper in the country.

We have practically used the Tribune exclusively since May of this year.

From the results obtained from this advertising in previous years and especially during the present year, we can say that we have found that it pays to concentrate in the Chicago Tribune.

Yours very truly,
STOVER CO.
President.

EEL:DC

FOR the past six years the Stover Company, Chicago distributor of Frigidaire, has relied upon the Chicago Tribune for major assistance in selling electrical refrigerators to the home-makers and home builders in Chicago and adjacent territory.

On week-days and on Sundays they have used the Tribune to place their sales messages before Chicago's largest, most responsive audience of men and women readers. They have used pages in black-and-white, in rotogravure, in color rotogravure, and in run-of-paper 2-color.

During each of these years the Chicago Tribune carried more Frigidaire lineage than any other Chicago paper. In May of this year, after checking results, the Stover Company decided to use the Chicago Tribune alone.

Of the Stover Company's advertising policy, Mr. E. E. Levy, president, says:

We have used the Tribune exclusively since May of this year.

"From the results obtained from this advertising in previous years, and especially during the present year, we can say that we have found that it pays to concentrate in the Chicago Tribune."

JUDGES CONSIDER 10 PLAYERS FOR TRIBUNE AWARD

Ballots Go Out This Week for Mail Vote.

PREVIOUS WINNERS.
1924—Red Grange, Illinois.
1925—Tim Lowry, Northwestern.
1926—Benny Friedman, Michigan.
1927—Ken Rouse, Chicago.
1928—Chuck Bennett, Indiana.
1929—Bill Glassgow, Iowa.

BY HARVEY WOODRUFF.

Ten players, one on each eleven, have been voted by their teammates as the most valuable players on these respective ten teams.

From this group, so chosen, will be picked the Big Ten player of greatest value to his team during the season of 1930. That choice will be made by the board of award, consisting of the Big Ten coaches, ten officials who have worked in conference games this fall, Commissioner Griffith, Wilfrid Smith [successor to the late Walter Eckersall], and the writer. To this choice will be presented THE TRIBUNE'S seventh annual trophy, a sterling silver football, actual size, mounted on an ebony base.

Names of Contenders.

The ten players from whom the choice will be made are:

Bob Clark, center, Northwestern.
Jack Wheeler, half back, Michigan.
George Sisler, guard, Purdue.
William Lusby, full back, Wisconsin.
Wesley Fesler, end, Ohio State.
Clarence Munn, guard, Minnesota.
Joe Zeller, guard, Indiana.
Stan Bodmas, tackle, Illinois.
Wally Knudson, full back, Chicago.
Oliver Sansen, half back, Iowa.

Letters will be mailed this week to members of the board of award and the result of the balloting will be announced as soon as it is complete. At this season of the year when many coaches are away on short vacations or for conferences, replies are slower than usual. The result should be known in time for a Christmas surprise to the winner.

How Award Will Be Made.

The method of balloting is this: Members of the board of award will be asked to name their first and second choices for the honor from the list of ten named above. Each first choice will count two points and each second choice will count one point. The highest aggregate of points will determine the winner.

Each coach will be privileged to name the selection from his own college is he so elects. In the past, when the choice was a "free field" with none named in advance, coaches were told it was hoped they would be able to name conscientiously one player from their own team. Such suggestion no longer is necessary.

Result of the balloting will be announced as to the leader. Each individual ballot is regarded confidential, and will not be divulged. If for any reason, the votes cast for any candidate are such that publication might indirectly reveal his voting sponsors, the total will be omitted. Names, however, of each player receiving votes will be published.

Use New Method This Year.

This is the first season that THE TRIBUNE sports department has undertaken this method of awarding the silver football. Heretofore, members of the board of award have named their choices from the entire playing personnel without restriction on their choices. The plan was successful, but it had one distinct disadvantage. Where one or more players on the same eleven were equally prominent, the tendency was to divide their strength and their college thus had less chance of a representative carrying away the prize, which is an honor not only to the individual, but to the entire student body as well.

Moreover, THE TRIBUNE sports department thought that more than one person should be honored. Hence the decision to enlarge the plan and give each college some part of the limelight. Added to this thought was the fact that THE TRIBUNE discontinued this year the practice of naming all-star elevens owing to the not unusual unfairness of such selections.

Don't Seek "Greatest" Player.

Readers following this contest should remember that no effort was made to name the "greatest" player on each eleven and no effort will be made to name the "greatest" player in the Big Ten. The gauge is the most useful player, the player of greatest value to his team as a whole.

Qualifications under this heading necessarily imply being a good or consistent performer, but they also include leadership, self-sacrifice, spirit, sportsmanship—all the traits which sometimes do not show to the spectators, but are known to coaches and officials, who meet the boys at close range.

In this connection it is interesting to note that, of the ten named by the players themselves, six are line men and four are back field men. The choice of ball carriers by their mates showed marked preference for those backs who also were good defensively as well as offensively.

Line Men Win Twice.

When the trophy was first offered, in 1924, the greatest fear was that a line man never would be chosen, because he was less conspicuous. The makeup of the board of award, however, guarded against that contingency. Two of the previous six winners have been from the line.

Readers may, if they choose, send in their opinions during the period of balloting. Such communications will be considered by Wilfrid Smith and the writer if they present any new ideas. If not more than 100 words and suitable for publication, they may appear in "The Wake." Other members of the board of award will use their own judgment in considering such recommendations from the public.

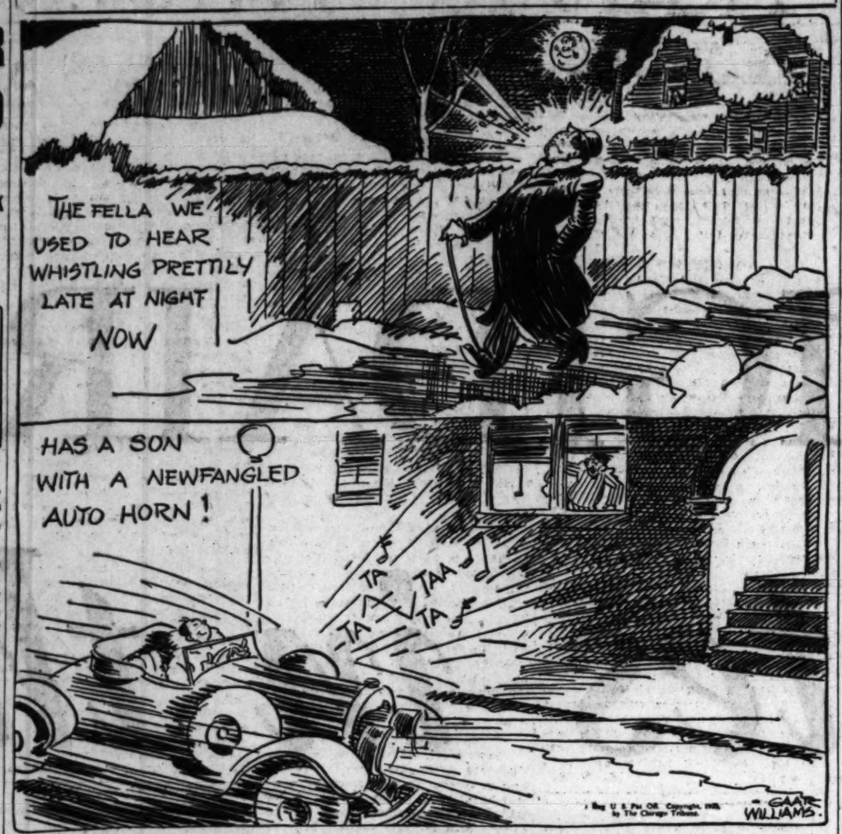
AMONG THE FOLKS IN HISTORY



How to Halt Diving Boxers —A Hint From Aquarium

BY EDWARD BURNS.

Solve one problem and along comes another one. Life is like that, especially in the prize fight business.

For a long time those charged with the regulation of boxing were distressed by the epidemic of fouls which brought precipitate terminations to fights, with the ticketholders invariably cast as a mob of sapa.

The thing got so raw, you'll recall, that in many states it recently has become necessary—a legal order—for the fighters to wear protective equipment which reduces the possibility of severe injury by a low blow to an almost negligible minimum. The fighters and their managers at first squawked on the use of protective devices, but, brazen as they are, could not think up an evasion that they had the crust to present.

"Victims" Fear Medics.

This disturbed the fighters who don't like to even pretend to fight for most of them have learned that sailors, and one of the sailors picks up the other and drops him, flat on his back, to the floor of the orchestra pit. It's a marvelous stunt and shows what can be done with skill and practice.

Press Row Breaks Fall.

The fighters, however, have a break on the sailor, for the fighter has his fall broken by telegraph operators, boxing commissioners, authors and plain crashers, whereas there is nothing between the sailor and the floor when he starts his tumble.

We recently witnessed what was billed as a fight between a champion—a real fighting champion, incidentally—and a man some 35 pounds heavier than the champ. Just a few folks were in attendance and the small turnout unquestionably was a blow to the vanity of each performer.

The first 55 seconds of the first round saw the heavier gent half a capable medical examiner can tell whether a knockout is real or feigned. And few pugilists have the courage to submit to a real knockout if they can help it. Anyhow, the Carnera tour and the scandals thereof made the feigned K. O. passé.

Fight managers are at times resourceful, however, and it now appears that the idea of leaving the ring completely is in for a great vogue until the tardy commissioners of boxing here and there will do something to discourage the act.

All the pugilist designated as the loser has to do, at least in Illinois, is to get outside and stay outside the ropes while the referee and timekeeper count 10. The pugilist who has been designated as the winner then officially is adjudged the victor by a technical knockout.

The fighter must receive no assistance in getting back into the ring until after he is counted out. This is a delightful feature of the technique we are discussing.

In the case of a tough commission it is possible for the designated loser to dive out of the ring and off the platform, and, if he fails to get properly tangled up, signal a planted confederate, such as an usher, who helps him recover his poise, but causes him to be disqualified. Or if a great deal of realism is required, the confederate may tangle with the designated loser. The scissors hold is the best for this.

Of course it takes some skill to fall out a ring without exciting suspicion or suffering real injury.

We don't know whether you go to the theater often, but there's a team of musical revue acrobats dressed as and clear out of the ring and on the concrete in the second instance. His two onslaughts on the ropes for some reason or other reminded us of one of those green, buzzing bull flies that make such a hubbub in trying to fly through a plate glass window.

At Last—He Gets Out.

The big boy succeeded in ending the fight with 55 seconds of ring endeavor, but the poor fellow wasn't as skilled as the aforementioned sailor, and despite the human buffers on whom he lit on the way down, he really hurt his knee.

But this is just an accident and is not likely to happen to other artists who employ the ring leaving technique as a means of establishing the 55 second month for ring laborers.

No boxing commissioner has asked us to help out on a solution of the ring leaving problem, but we were over to the aquarium the other day and had an idea.

Here's How to Stop It.

The way to keep fighters from leaving the ring while the fight is supposed to be going on seems quite simple, now that we've thought it all out. All the commission has to do is enclose the ring with slabs of heavy, shatterproof glass, the panels being about a foot beyond the ropes and as high as the top rope.

Then, if a designated loser tried to climb out of the enclosure, wouldn't it be evidence that he was full of deceit?

Of course chicken netting or bars could be used instead of the shatterproof glass, but this would make the customers squint, and they suffer enough as it is.

Appleby Adds to Cue Lead Over Fessenden

Madison, Wis., Dec. 6.—(AP)—Edgar Appleby, New York, national amateur 18.2 balk line billiard champion, tonight rounded the two-thirds mark in his 900 point match with Ray Fessenden, Madison challenger and former champion, with a lead of 600 to 292. Appleby won the opening block, 300 to 135, earlier today.

LOYOLA OF SOUTH BEATS DETROIT IN CHARITY GAME, 9-6

New Orleans, La., Dec. 6.—(AP)—Loyola of the South defeated the University of Detroit team, 9 to 6, today in a charity football game. Loyola made its first touchdown against Detroit's second string men and narrowly missed two other touchdowns against the varsity. Loyola gained two points on a safety when Detroit player was downed behind his goal as he attempted to pass. Detroit scored in the last quarter.

Canadian Geese Take a Tumble in Hunters' Blind

BY BOB BECKER.

If the wild geese which come to the broad, flat sand bars above Cairo, Ill., do not watch their steps during their nightly frolics on the bars, the owners of these lands will have to light up the underground blinds to keep the prowling birds from falling into them. When we visited the goose country a few days ago we found that two honkers, one of the Canadian variety and the other a beautiful snow goose, had taken a tumble into a pit blind, even though the blinds were almost completely covered.

When we were visiting the sand bars to pit our wits against the crafty honkers and to see them sweep into their night roost by the thousands, we heard about a "brant" that had fallen into one of the blinds.

It seems that this bird, along with thousands of other geese—mostly of the Canadian variety—had occupied th bar the enight before. Apparently the brant, walking around in the dark, had not looked before it stepped, so it tumbled into a five foot pit which serves as a goose blind. The bird was unhurt by the fall.

It couldn't get out of the pit, because geese, like airplanes, must have a runway in order to get into the air. They cannot "spring" like a mallard and get altitude quickly.

On the contrary, the heavy bodied honkers must have enough wing and foot room to operate their four or five foot wing spread and at the same time push with their feet in a sort of galloping push-'em-up movement.

We had one of the boys take us around to see the brant that had tumbled off the bar. It wasn't a brant at all. It was a snow goose, and a beauty, too. Apparently, any goose not a Canadian is listed as a brant by the residents along the Mississippi river above Cairo.

The true brant has head, neck, throat and upper breast and shoulders blackish, whereas the snow goose is white [just as its name indicates], except for the ends of its wings and the wing coverts. Moreover, brant are quite rare in the interior, whereas the Mississippi valley is on the migration route of the blue and snow geese.

This snow goose that tumbled into a pit had company a couple of nights after its accident, because a Canadian honker also took a high dive into a pit one dark night. It also was uninjured, so it is assured of a plenty to eat, a long life and kind treatment.

HUMBER DRILLS CADETS AS SASSE SCOUTS MIDDIES

West Point, N. Y., Dec. 6.—[U. P.]—The Army football team went through a long workout today under the direction of Capt. "Polly" Humber in the absence of Maj. Ralph Sasse and members of his coaching staff, who were scouting Navy at Philadelphia.

The Plebe team, using navy formations, and the scrubs provided the varsity with a hard offensive and defensive practice. The workout is the first of the finishing touches for the post-season game with Navy next Saturday. Similar sessions are planned for Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of next week.

CARTHAGE BEATS WESTERN STATE TEACHERS, 12-6

Carthage, Ill., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—The Carthage college football team defeated the Western State Teachers College of Macomb here this afternoon, 12 to 6. Carthage scored a touchdown in the second and third quarters, while Western rallied in the final moments of the game to save itself from a shutout. Henkenson of Carthage and Bodecker of Macomb were outstanding players.

Rice Gives Iowa State Its 16th Straight Grid Loss, 13-7

Houston, Tex., Dec. 6.—(AP)—Iowa State lost its sixteenth consecutive football game here this afternoon when they were defeated by the Rice institute Owls, 13 to 7. The Iowans, trailing all the way, came back late in the fourth quarter to make their only tally.

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—The United States Navy eleven left the football team of Pennsylvania thoroughly and convincingly beaten, 26 to 0, at Franklin field today.

Through the first half of the game, with 60,000 people sitting under a lowering gray sky to watch, the Navy football team shoved Penn back on its heels but couldn't score. Then, in the third period, the steady fire took effect and four Navy touchdowns were hung up on the scoreboard, with two points following them.

The Middies stopped the running attack of Penn, and kept Masters, Gentle and other Penn backs shackled. In the air, Penn could do no better; her backs threw passes but they could complete only two for real gains.

Penn Slightly Favored.

Penn may have been favored slightly before the start, but these midshipmen had heard nothing about that. They had a football game to win and they did it with few wasted motions. A fumble, an intercepted Penn pass, a long pass of their own and a blocked Navy kick set the stage for four touchdowns in the second half.

Hurley and Gastree each scored one and Gannon added two. Capt. Bowstrom place kicked the extra point after the first score, and Williams threw a neat pass to Byng for the extra point after the third.

Hurley Looks Good.

In defeating Penn, Navy uncovered a fine power back in Hurley after Kirn, his nose bloodied, left the game at half time. In the line, Tuttle turned in a fine performance at center as did Bowstrom at tackle.

James Rides Three Winners at Jefferson

New Orleans, La., Dec. 6.—(AP)—Battling his way toward the top of the 1930 jockey honor list, Eugene James, former Louisville newsboy, today rode home three winners at Jefferson Park.

Although it was a common occurrence for the little apprentice to ride three winners a day on the northern tracks, it was the first time he had turned the trick at the Jefferson Park meeting, which opened on Thanksgiving day.

The triple placed him in a position to head the list of jockeys in winners for the year.

James' first victory was on F. Cammarita's Nervator in the opening race. He then waited until the fifth number before piloting Phil Reuter's Bob Kernan home in front of his field. He completed his triple with a triumphant ride on J. Keller's Delmonico in the sixth race.

The Superior stable's Supreme Sweet, heavily played by the big crowd, scored impressively in the French hospital handicap—the six furlong feature of the card. A length and a half back of the fast stepping filly followed D. Bentham's Martis, racing with Frank Sereba's War Instigator third.

All Three of the Vitamins Not Found In All Food

Vitamins are found in certain foods and fruits. They are found in milk and in certain salts and meats. Today's methods of food preservation and cooking often destroy the vitamin elements in food which give it its nutritive and sustaining value. Because of this, leading health authorities unite in declaring that a tonic, like native and eliminative combined with vitamins is a most natural help for the scale of health. The demand reported for Vitalex is evidence that the men and women of this city are certain that the laboratory responsible for Vitalex would not suggest a seven-day trial if the heads of the laboratory were not sure of the results which have been found to be true to those who use Vitalex and the new form such as when combined in Vitalex.

MOTORS—TRAFFIC—HIGHWAYS

COLGATE BEATS N. Y. U., 7 TO 6, IN CHARITY BATTLE

Small Attendance Makes It Financial Failure.

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Dec. 6.—Notwithstanding the attraction of three bands, two football teams, good weather, and the cause of charity, Colgate and New York university played their postseason game for the benefit of the unemployed before a crowd of not more than 15,000 in a stadium built for 75,000 this afternoon and the production was a financial flop. Colgate won, 7 to 6, after a final sweep had carried New York 69 yards to a touchdown in the last two minutes of play.

John Orsi, one of the Colgate ends, who had scored the touchdown for his side in the first period, broke through and blocked a place kick hot from the toe of Jimmy Tanguay to save the victory for Colgate as the hand on the large red dial moved across in a final little jump to close the game.

Crowd Stays Away.

These two universities, Colgate and New York U., were the only two civilian schools of any prominence in the east to volunteer to produce a game for the relief of the depressed element in the metropolis. They were not natural rivals and their meeting was one that obviously required high pressure exploitation. But though the newspapers whooped it up for five days and Jimmy Walker, the mayor, came to the Yankee stadium in person, the customers remained away by millions, the game was played in comparative privacy and charity suffered a severe attack of chilblains. The site was the Yankee stadium where the Army and Navy will play their game for the same cause next week. There are misgivings now as to the success of that one, for the middle price tickets are not selling as briskly as the promoting committees had expected and even some of the cheap seats in the end zones are still yearning for buyers. Today's piece was offered at prices ranging from $2 to $6.

Boys Try Hard.

The college boys flung themselves about the yard with a reckless disregard for their health which deserved a much better response, but football players do not customarily concern themselves with counting the house and they may not have known that their efforts were unappreciated.

Les Macaluso, the Colgate full back, exacted a lot of yardage from New York U.'s wavering forward line in the first half of the game, plunging through the holes with a drive that sometimes seemed to be pushing his own interference as well as the whole New York university before him. But the touchdown in the first quarter came from a forward pass in which he took only a supporting part and Orsi caught the ball from Capt. Hart to score. Macaluso then kicked the goal.

Twice again Colgate was in a position to score, once in the second period when the ball stalled against a solid defense on the one yard line and again in the final period when the attack failed three yards from the goal. Macaluso's drive lost power or the defense stiffened in proportion to his proximity to the goal. He was good for jumps of eight and ten yards between the 25 yard lines, but his gains dwindled sharply to nothing when touchdowns seemed imminent.

N. Y. U. Opens Drive.

New York U.'s drive for the touchdown swept quickly down the field from their own 29 yard line to the goal within a couple of minutes. They took the ball on downs and Tanguay went away to his left for a ten yard gain. There was only one senior in the New York lineup in this closing quarter of the game and it was a sophomore substitute named Bill Dunn who plucked a long pass out of the air, thrown by Tanguay, for the next big gain. The ball arched over the whole cast to settle in his hands at Colgate's 34 yard line.

Again Tanguay scurried around the end for a ten yard gain and the two small groups of undergraduates set up two opposing yells, strident and not very substantial in so large a stadium but full of feeling. Tanguay threw another pass to the sophomore sub, and Dunn was thrown only six yards from the goal. There a five yard penalty was assessed against Colgate and New York U.'s squad in their violet jerseys and marshmallow helmets stepped off their military battle and hike at a hasty gait to save seconds of time.

Tanguay failed to gain the yard on the first down, but Joe Lamark slid over the pile on the next plunge for a touchdown. The failure of the kick as Orsi crashed through to deflect it was the deciding play of the game and the bands began to stir on the sidelines for the closing ceremonies.

A gun boomed. The teams recoiled and fled to the lockers. A police detachment band fell in on the field between the rival bands of the universities and they horned some selections at the disappearing attendance.

Packers Seek to Clinch Title Against Bears

Jumpin' Joe Savoldi will get a real test this afternoon when he faces the Green Bay Packers for the first time since he joined the Chicago Bears in the National Professional Football league. The game will start at 2 p. m. at Wrigley field.

The Packers arrived in town last night, accompanied by a crowd of fans from the Wisconsin city. They expressed considerable indignation because the Bears beat them to it in signing Joe to a contract.

Green Bay must win today to clinch the championship, which it held last year. The Bears have a chance to climb into third position in the standing if they are victorious.

Bears Lose Two Close Games.

The Bears lost a 7 to 0 verdict at Green Bay early in the season and then last month were nosed out, 13 to 12, at Wrigley field.

Bill Senn, who did some good punting against Portsmouth last Sunday, no doubt will get the opportunity to match skill with Verne Lewellyn, who has reigned as the best kicker in the circuit for several seasons. Joe Lintzenich, too, will share in this department, and between the two of them are expected to hold Lewellyn even.

Jugger Earpe, the Green Bay center, has a score to settle with George Trafton and Bert Pearson, who handle the center job for the Bears. Earpe shares with Cal Hubbard, tackle, the distinction of being the burliest of the Packers. He weighs about 240 pounds.

Grange Winds Up Good Year.

Red Grange proved to be the biggest threat to the Packers in both contests this year. He has been playing the best game of his professional career and hopes to top off the league season with a flourish.

Rockne Calls It Greatest Game of Year

as the Trojans' pilot walked dejectedly from the gridiron late in the game, his face buried under his arm to hide the tears that welled from his eyes.

It seemed for a moment in the third quarter that a fist fight was going to cause trouble on the playing field, as Bert Metzger, the scrappy little Irish guard, and Johnny Baker, Trojan guard, swung their fists passionately but ineffectually at each other. Conley and Schwartz bore down on the group of players surrounding the bellicose guards and nudged Metzger away just as Referee Frank Birch galloped up to the scene. Birch made Baker and Metzger shake hands and the game proceeded.

Just as Substitute Full Back O'Connor did the heavy ground gaining for Notre Dame, a substitute, Blanchard Beatty, 158 pound third string quarter back of the Trojans, presented his eleven with the bulk of its yardage. Entering the game late in the fourth quarter, Beatty carried the ball on five successive plays after running back the kickoff for 34 yards, and piled up a total of 25 yards in six plays. He completed one long pass to Clarke, but Clarke caught it out of bounds, and so Beatty heaved the next one to Joslin, who caught it for a short gain. As the final gun sounded Beatty was still chopping at the Irish line on their 31 yard line.

Although they had little to cheer about, the Southern California rooters kept up a steady din throughout the game and were howling hopefully for a touchdown when the game ended.

Before the game the early arrivals were treated to a glimpse of the annual homecoming parade, in which more than 100 floats took part, rolling around the cinder path that circles the gridiron.

One of the floats, which drew loud cheers from Trojan partisans, was far from prophetic. It depicted a Trojan busily shoveling dirt into a yawning grave in front of which stood a tombstone bedecked in Notre Dame colors. Two other tombstones, representing California and Stanford, which fell victims to the Trojans, stood beside it.

The defeat was the most crushing Southern California has suffered in the five years Howard Jones has been coaching at Los Angeles. It was the second time in the five years that the Trojans have failed to score at least one touchdown. Their other failure was in a scoreless tie with California two years ago.

The Irish by rolling across the goal line four times became the first team to score more than two touchdowns against Southern California during the Jones régime. Washington State once scored two touchdowns and a field goal, but no other eleven ever has scored three touchdowns.

CHICAGO GIRDS FOR ITS FIGHT TO CONTROL SNOW

Keeping Streets Open Is a Huge Job.

With winter here, authorities who must bear the burden of keeping the city's boulevards open for traffic are laying plans for their annual combat with their greatest foe—snow. This symbol of winter, beautiful and of little danger in small amounts, presents a problem that has never been solved satisfactorily when a fall reaches the deep stage.

All sorts of methods and contrivances have been tested by the various park boards whose duty it is to keep boulevards and streets passable for motorists no matter what conditions may be.

This year the traffic division of the south park board, at the suggestion of President Edward J. Kelly, proposes to set aside a section of some boulevards or thoroughfares for experimenting in snow control. Here will be tested suggestions made by traffic experts and others for ways to overcome the snow problem.

Cuts Down Traffic Jams.

Motorists doubtless recall how after a heavy snow there may be a clear right of way in the center of a boulevard, with banks of snow along the sides cutting down materially the efficiency of the thoroughfare through reducing the number of traffic lanes. This free lane may be as free from snow as a summer road as a result of friction from moving automobile wheels melting the snow remaining after a plowing. Or the snow may be broken into such fine particles that it is easily blown away.

Now a suggestion is made by a motorist that some method be devised whereby snow be rolled flat instead of plowed in cases where it is not possible to remove it entirely. The argument is that the wheels of a large number of automobiles passing over it will melt it uniformly over the entire width of the road instead of leaving a narrow center path down the center. This melting process would be aided by the exhausts of the automobiles, it is suggested.

This is one proposal that is to be given consideration by the south park board.

Wanted Snow in Old Days.

In connection with the snow removal problem, H. F. Richards, who has been connected with the south park system for forty-eight years, has some interesting comments.

"In the old days when the city's sports enjoyed the winter air by driving about in cutters and when bobsleigh parties were a popular pastime with the young folks, we wanted to get as much snow on the streets as we could," Mr. Richards reminisced. "But it's different now. We have about 92 miles of boulevards and 150 miles of sidewalks that must be kept clear of snow, and it's a job.

"We have a twenty-four hour service for fighting snow. When a half inch has fallen in any given locality, the policeman on duty there must immediately notify headquarters. We have some thirty contractors with trucks to which plows are attached ready to get on the job at a half hour's notice.

"Our system is divided into five districts, to each of which certain contractors are assigned. We allow the contractor thirty minutes to attach a plow to a truck after he has been notified and we allow ourselves an additional thirty minutes to watch the weather. And we keep in close touch with the weather man. If he says it looks as if the snow is going to keep up after we have noted a half inch on the pavement we order the trucks out, no matter what time of day or night it may be.

Blowers on Outer Drive.

"Snow control is what we are after. Once the snow gets a start it is difficult to combat it. For instance, when we have cleared the drives of one fall we immediately get set for another, because this second fall will be much more difficult to handle than the first on account of piles and drifts.

"A system of snow control that will work in one section of our boulevard system will not be practical in another. We have blowers that are successful on the long stretches of the outer drives. These blowers will hurl snow for a distance of 150 feet. Where there are no pedestrians or buildings, these devices work very well, but we could not use them in crowded districts.

"Possibly the most generally successful way of fighting snow is to use three or four plows in a staggered line, according to the width of the street. The first plow cleaning one side of a boulevard pushes the snow to the right, a plow following a little behind and more to the right pushes the snow still farther to the right, and so on until the snow is pushed over to the curb. In bad spots we use tractors to force it at right angles over the curb. Then comes the business of carting the snow away before another fall starts.

$5,000 an Inch.

"When a snowfall is just an inch or two we don't figure that it costs much to keep in control, but when it runs to five inches we estimate the cost at $5,000 an inch thereafter.

"Our snow fighting force fights for one aim—control. If we let a snow get away from us the task of keeping the highways open is much more difficult. That is why we keep ourselves ready to put a force of men on the streets at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning if it is necessary."

Mr. Richards explained that various methods have been suggested for fighting snow, most of which have proved impractical. One suggestion was to pile snow in the center of a street so that it would melt during the day and run into sewers that were clear. It was found that the snow would melt during the day and at night it would freeze, leaving a smooth coating of ice for automobiles to skid on. Several suggestions have been made for the melting of snow with heat, but it was found that the cost would be prohibitive.

VOICE OF THE TRAFFIC

THE PARKING HOG.

Evanston, Ill., Dec. 1.—There is a new species of animal developed in the motoring world, a close relative of the "Road Hog"—viz, the "Parking Hog."

This type of "Hog" either parks with left wheel to curb, or more often sprawls his car over limited parking spaces so that no one else can utilize space which ordinarily would easily accommodate two or more cars. It makes no difference to this type of Hog whether it is head to or parallel to curb. He is consistently indifferent to the rights of others as are the road hogs and all other types of hogs one occasionally meets in the daily traffic. A. H. R.

ELIMINATION OF DEATH TRAP.

Chicago, Dec. 1.—In the interest of safety I wish to bring to your notice the following incident which occurred at 5:45 p. m. Tuesday evening, Nov. 25, 1930, at the grade crossing of the B. and O. R. R. on Jeffery avenue between 76th and 77th street.

The night was dark and the air full of snow flurries; an inch of snow on a layer of ice made all roads very treacherous and quick stopping impossible. An automobile traveling south on Jeffery avenue came to a full stop at the stop sign at 76th street and proceeded some 50 feet to the grade crossing. A box car pushed by a switch engine glided slowly across the boulevard from behind a fueling station. A brakeman riding the steps of the oncoming box car represented the only danger signal, no gates, no red lights, no whistle, and no engine bell audible to the motorist in a closed machine.

Result: Two people escaped death or serious injury by a split second due only to the presence of mind of the drive of the car they were riding in.

Your cooperation is enlisted to eliminate such a death trap. Let us have gates, red lights, or a flagman who really flags at this crossing, which is all the more dangerous since there are only one of two trains operating over same during a day. It only takes one to make an accident. O. W. CALLOW.

DANGEROUS OUTER DRIVE.

Chicago, Dec. 3.—Chicago, the mecca for tourists, is inadequately providing for the motorists' safety by insufficiently placarding the outer drive with proper directions for turning. There are several places where only those thoroughly familiar with the roadway know how to leave the main highway without danger.

One very dangerous spot is at 39th and the drive. The motorist driving north has only one poorly made sign which warns against a left turn to guide him. Only those driving along the right of the road can read it. In addition, the sign has no light above it at night. Several accidents have occurred here because drivers unfamiliar with the traffic rules have innocently turned "left" and have collided with a south bound car instead of having turned "right" over the bridge.

Now it might be contended by those responsible that proper electrically lighted signs are being contemplated for this important highway. In the meantime, however, lives are being endangered. Those who have to do with this work should place the signs at least a half mile from the junction where the motorist is to turn and then another sign as an additional warning a short distance from the spot. Not a few drivers have been "bawled" out for failure to obey a sign that could only be seen by a very few. E. W. H.

NEWS AND VIEWS

The new Lincoln line, which made its debut this week, includes eight standard types. The wheel base is 145 inches, length being added to afford greater roominess. The outstanding feature is a new silent free wheeling transmission which permits gear shifting back and forth between second and high without disengaging the clutch. The new eight cylinder V-type engine is rated at 120 horsepower, an increase of 30 per cent over present engines.

Operating on a full weekly production schedule of five and a half days, Stutz reports that its entire output has been sold for a month in advance. Distributors and dealers have been notified that no orders can be accepted for delivery before the latter part of December.

Using the wide open spaces of the west as a complete proving ground, Nash engineers have just completed a seven weeks' open road run which took six new cars of the Nash 1931 series, picked at random, over a total of 50,581 miles of the hardest driving available in the country.

Deliveries of Dodge trucks to dealers in both September and October showed a material increase over any previous month this year and exceeded the total deliveries for the five preceding months, according to an announcement by Dodge Brothers.

Wide Spark Plug Gaps Are Cause of Hard Starting

Hard starting is frequently due to the spark plug gap being too wide. It is advisable especially at this time to reset the gap according to recommendations in the car owner's instruction manual. With the plugs in proper shape starting is made easier and battery strength conserved.

C. J. FAULKNER PILOT

ASK any man you know who is connected with cigar-making—"When is a cigar at its best?" And he'll tell you—"Just when it's new-made, when its aroma is freshest!"

Long have cigar manufacturers experimented to find a way to retain that "new-made" freshness in a cigar until it reaches the smoker—without success. But now Dutch Masters' revolutionary new "Cold-Treatment" process does it! This unique invention takes a Dutch Masters Cigar just as it comes from the machine—just at that precise moment when the flavor and aroma of the fine tobaccos are at their fresh Peak of Perfection. And then, by an exclusive and secret process of "Cold-Treatment", seals that fresh aroma within the cigar itself—to be retained there until your match releases it in long, fragrant puffs.

BURKAN SUES TO WREST CONTROL OF PAN-AMERICAN

Asks Accounting of Oil Company's Dividends.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Dec. 6.—Nathan Burkan, lawyer and Tammany leader, has brought suit as a stockholder of the Pan-American Petroleum and Transport corporation against the Standard Oil Company of Indiana and its officers to wrest control of Pan-American from Standard Oil. He also seeks to compel the Standard Oil officers as well as the officers and directors of Pan-American, alleged to have been named by Standard, to account to the Pan-American stockholders for millions of dollars in unpaid dividends.

The action was disclosed in the Supreme court when the Pan-American company had the case transferred to the federal court for trial on the ground of the diverse citizenship of the plaintiff and the various defendants.

Demands Injunction.

The complaint demands an injunction restraining the Standard of Indiana from carrying out an offer to exchange seven shares of its stock for six of the Pan-American Petroleum and Transport corporation; that the Standard Oil officers be enjoined from interfering with and dictating to the Pan-American officers as to using their discretion in the matter of resuming dividend payments; that the Standard Oil designees on the Pan-American board be compelled to resign; that all the Pan-American stock acquired by the Standard in "fraud" of the rights of the plaintiff and other minority stockholders be turned back; that the Pan-American officers and directors be compelled to resume dividends on the average rate paid since 1919 and that the directors of the two corporations be held liable for the withholding of dividends on the Pan-American A and B common stock when the company's net profits and surplus warranted dividends.

Mr. Burkan, who sues in behalf of himself and other stockholders similarly situated, says he bought 100 shares of class B common stock of Pan-American in 1928 at $50 a share. The company is one of the largest oil producing organizations in the world, owning eight other companies, he says, the holding aggregating many millions of dollars. It holds 1,500,000 acres of oil lands in Tampico, Mex., and leases 3,100,000 acres in Venezuela, the oil output increasing from 16,000,000 barrels in 1920 to 60,000,000 in 1928. The company has been "highly successful," he says.

Cites Payments.

The complaint states that the company paid dividends of $6 a share in October, 1919, on the A and B stock and continued them at that rate until 1923, when $8 a share was paid. A payment of $3 was made in 1924, while from 1925 to 1927 the dividends were $1.50 a share, ending in the latter year. A 10 per cent stock dividend was paid in 1920, while 25 per cent was paid in December, 1922 and 20 per cent in February, 1923.

Mr. Burkan states that the net fixed assets on Dec. 31 last were reported as $187,000,000 and the current assets increased the total to $257,000,000. The capital surplus was $24,777,000 and the earned surplus was $37,071,230, while Mr. Burkan alleged that there was a net profit of $10,000,000 applicable to dividends. He believes the profits for the present year will exceed those of last year because the net earnings for the first six months were reported at $7,988,361.

"The complaint alleges that prior to 1927 the Standard of Indiana got a substantial block of the A and B stock of Pan-American and as a result of continued buying in that year gained control by ownership of more than 51 per cent of the stock. The Standard then voted into the directorate of Pan-American ten of its own designees, it is alleged, and got control of the board. The Standard of Indiana officers are alleged to have conspired early in 1928 to acquire the balance of the Pan-American stock "at a price far below the actual value to give it complete control."

JULY FUTURES OFF AROUND 2c IN WHEAT MART

Persistent Buying Seen for Gov't.

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

Bulk of the trade in May wheat on the Chicago Board of Trade yesterday was at 81c for the old style delivery and 81⅛c for the new, with houses that usually act for the Stabilization corporation buying persistently. There was buying of December and selling of May during the day, and also selling of May in Chicago against purchases at Kansas City at 7⅛c difference, the latter operations being the first of consequence between the two markets.

There are no farm board activities in the July delivery, which represents the 1931 wheat crop, and in consequence the latter is quick to respond to any change in either the world situation or in the outlook for the new crop. Good rains were reported in parts of Oklahoma and Kansas and prices dropped 2c from the early high and closed around the bottom with net losses of 1⅛c at 73¼@73⅜c. Old crop months were un changed to ⅛c lower with December 77@77¼c; March, 78¾c, and May, 81c

Rains in Australia.

Reports of heavy rains in parts of Australia where harvesting is on had some effect on the Liverpool and Winnipeg wheat markets during the day, the former closing ⅜@⅝d higher, but Winnipeg was dull and was off 1@1¼c at the last, the unresponsive Buenos Aires cables and a limited foreign demand being the main depressing influences. The sharp decline in July at Chicago was also a factor in the Canadian market. Buenos Aires lost ⅝@⅞c despite the heavy rains of the previous day, and further reports showing disappointing threshing returns as harvesting progressed southward. The damage done by frost, rust, and drought is becoming more apparent in the southern sections, but there were no change in the estimated crop.

Cables indicated that there is a strong probability of France revising its milling regulations and permitting the importation of a much larger amount of foreign grain than anticipated a short while ago. It is expected, however, that Manitobas will be given the preference. Trade estimates place French requirements at 75,000,000 bu for the season, of which 1,000,000 bu have been imported so far.

Liquidation in Corn.

Long corn came out freely the greater part of the day, and at the inside prices were off 4¾@5¼c from the high on Wednesday. Some stop loss orders were caught on the way down and the finish was at net losses of 1⅝@2c for the day with old December, 72c; March, 76¼@76⅝c; May, 79¼c, and July, 79⅝@79⅞c.

Expectations are for a much larger movement of cash corn in the west this week, as railroads in Nebraska loaded 422 cars on Friday, which will probably be reflected in arrivals at Omaha on Monday. There was some selling during the day based on reports that foreign feed stuffs had been imported in considerable volume into the New England territory. Little change was shown in the basis in the sample market. Shipping sales aggregated 56,000 bu but there were deliveries of 270,000 bu on December contracts and 60,000 bu were sold to go to store.

There was a noticeable lack of the aggressive buying which has been witnessed in rye of late, and with scattered liquidation prices dropped sharply, and the finish was 1⅝@2c lower with December 46¾@47c and May 47½c. B. W. Snow of Bartlett-Frazier estimates that there has been a reduction of 19 per cent in the acreage in the Dakotas and Minnesota as compared with that harvested while the condition is below normal for this season.

Commission houses and locals were on the selling side of oats futures in sympathy with the decline in corn, and the close was ¾@⅞c lower. Old December finished at 35@35¼c, and May, 37@37½c. Cash interests bought old May on the break.

Brokers File Suit Against W. C. Durant

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Dec. 6.—William C. Durant, automobile manufacturer, who has been operating extensively in Wall street, was sued in the Supreme court today by the stock exchange firm of Benjamin Block & Co. for a judgment permitting the brokers to sell a quantity of stock and other collateral deposited by Durant and others to protect sixteen speculative accounts. The brokers assert that there is a balance of $71,367 after the reduction in the last few months of an indebtedness of $644,482.

W. C. DURANT. [Campbell Photo.]

The suit is brought on the ground that Durant now contends that he never authorized the brokers to sell the deposited securities to apply on the debt, and because some of the collateral was deposited by him in accounts carried in the names of others. These names included Edward V. Rickenbacker, aviation ace and automobile man; the Whittier corporation, R. Randolph Hicks, lawyer; Mrs. Catherine Durant, A. A. Heninger, F. W. A. Veaper, and George Learnard, all of whom are also named as defendants.

Claims Superior Lien.

The plaintiff states that these "other defendants" have liens against the securities sought to be sold, and asks that such liens, if any, be foreclosed on the ground that the lien of the plaintiff is superior.

It is understood that Durant will file an answer based on the statement in the complaint that he now asserts that he never authorized the sale of any of the collateral, and that a counterclaim for damages is likely to be made.

The complaint states that of the sixteen accounts carried with the brokers by Mr. Durant, six were in the name of the Whittier corporation, of which a half interest in Benjamin Block-W. C. Durant"; another "urant-Fisher," and one was in the name of Mrs. W. C. Durant. Mr. Drant is alleged to have agreed that in consideration of the brokers carrying the accounts on a margin of atleast 25 per cent that the brokers could have a lien on all securities deposited or purchased for the accounts and could sell any of them at any time to protect themselves.

Say Durant Offers Notes.

The brokers allege that on Oct. 10, last, there was a debit balance of $2,399,302 in the accounts against which the plaintiffs held securities having a market value at the time of $1,754,820, excluding 100,000 shares of Durant Motors, Inc., then of doubtful market value but not worth more than $100,000, leaving a net debit of $644,482 exclusive of the Durant stock. They say that on Oct. 30 they demanded cash or more collateral to protect the accounts and that Mr Durant said he could furnish neither but offered two notes of $150,000 made to him by Norman Devaux, one payable Nov. 1, last, and the other on July 1, next. He also offered 75,000 shares of Durant Motors and a "give up" sale of 3,000 Loew's, Inc., common, amounting to far less than the deficit.

The complaint sets forth that Mr. Block stated to Mr. Durant that he would have to close out the accounts "and would put the securities on the market but would use his best judgment in disposing of them," to which Mr. Durant is urged to have agreed. The brokers then proceeded to liquidate them with the result that on Nov. 20, last, the debit was reduced to $71,367, against which they hold the securities now sought to be sold.

Denial Agreement.

The plaintiffs say that Mr. Durant has now denied making this agreement of Oct. 0, has disclaimed plaintiffs' authority to make the sales or any future sales, and it is now necessary for the protection of the plaintiffs in their future conduct in reference to the securities that their and the defendants' rights be decreed."

The securities sought to be sold consist of 489 United States corporation, 76,050 Durant Motors, 35 Liberty National Bank and Trust co., and 1,000 Chrysler corporation, in addition to which the defendant is "short" 1,000 Chrysler, one of the $150,000 Devaux notes is paid and is included in the securities to be sold.

CRANE CO. SOON TO START NEW FORGING PLANT

Plan Production at Turn of Year.

BY HOWARD CARSWELL.

Production will begin about the first of the year in the new forging plant of the huge Crane company establishment at 41st and Kedzie avenue, according to J. B. Berryman, first vice president. Likewise the factories at Paris and Ipswich, England, are adding cast iron radiators and boilers to their line.

An indication of the company's 1930 earnings is not yet available. Crane company had a net income of $11,658,085 in 1929, which was equivalent to $4.42 per common share. Because of the dormancy of the building and construction industries and the last year's lethargy of business generally, the company's earnings should suffer for obvious reasons.

The history of the Crane company reveals another business romance of an early Chicagoan who laid the foundation for an industrial enterprise of world-wide operations. Richard Teller Crane was the Crane company for fifty-six years until his death in 1912. Reared in hardship, he went to work at the age of 9 in a cotton mill at Paterson, N. J. Other jobs followed and at 15 he apprenticed to a brass and bell founder in Brooklyn. Later came machine shop practice and also the panic of 1854. He was laid off.

Takes Greeley's Advice.

Horace Greeley's words, "Go west—young man. Go west," were full of meaning. Young Crane came to Chicago and looked up an uncle, Martin Ryerson. He built a barn-like structure in the corner of his uncle's lumber yard at Canal and Fulton streets. He was only 23 and the year was 1855 when the first Crane foundry poured its first metal. Copper points for lightning rods, not to mention brass bells, were in great demand. He and Charles, a brother, who had joined him, went after what business there was around town and usually got it. The first pipe mill and later the first malleable iron mill west of Pittsburgh were the result. In 1865 the company was incorporated as R. T. Crane & Bro.

A larger factory was built in 1870 at 10 North Jefferson street. It luckily escaped the great fire and its products helped to rebuild a ravaged city. Crane started making elevators and was a pioneer in this development but later, however, this business was sold. In 1886 came the first branch office at Omaha. Now branch offices and plants span the world.

Profits Increase.

By 1890 net profit had grown from $38,000 in 1875 to $573,000. In 1900 the net profit was $1,200,000 and the business had 6,000 employés. Today the pay roll exceeds $33,000,000 annually and there are more than 20,000 employés. Its great assortment of products—more than 30,000 items—ranges from bathtub to battleship equipment, from the cottage to skyscraper parts.

Richard T. Crane's death in 1912 came at the age of 80. Present officials speak reverently of the "old man's" rugged honesty, forceful personality, and the business ability to "see a dollar through a stone wall." The elder Chicago generation recalls his iconoclastic ideas against college education at public expense and his equally great devotion to the cause of elementary education for the masses.

The following record shows Crane company earnings back to 1924:

	Net income.	Earned on pfd.	Share com.
1929	$11,558,085	$78.15	$4.42
1928	7,154,196	47.82	2.60
1927	6,693,160	46.82	2.42
1926	9,250,957	64.71	3.85
1925	8,342,029	57.96	3.77
1924	8,008,863	58.08	3.65

The preferred and common stocks, both of which are listed on the Chicago Stock exchange, but are not actively traded in, are currently selling around 115 and 40, respectively.

Gift to Employés.

Richard T. Crane Jr. has been president of the company for 13 years, succeeding Charles R. Crane, who held the office for a brief two years following Founder Crane's death. Richard T. Crane III., son of Charles R., has not been active in the company's affairs. Charles R. Crane II., son of H. P. Crane and grandson of the founder, is a vice president in the sales division.

About 75 per cent of Crane stock is held within the Crane family, while the bulk of the remaining stock is held by employés, making the business much of a family and employé enterprise. Last July workers were given a gift of about $4,000,000 worth of stock by R. T. Crane Jr. It was the third gift to employés since 1926 and brought the total to $10,000,000.

ORDERS PENNSY RY. TO DIVEST HOLDINGS OF WABASH, LEHIGH ROADS

Washington, D. C., Dec. 6.—(AP)—Violation of the Clayton anti-trust act was charged to the Pennsylvania railroad today by the interstate commerce commission in ordering it to divest itself of holdings in the Wabash and Lehigh Valley railroads.

The Pennsylvania was instructed to dispose of the stock, acquired through its subsidiary, the Pennsylvania company, within six months.

The commission said the Wabash held 231,329 shares of Lehigh Valley stock, and that the Pennsylvania indirectly through its holding company acquired 675,800 shares of Wabash and 365,039 of Lehigh Valley.

It held the effect was to lessen competition between the Pennsylvania and the other roads.

The railroad opposed the order on the grounds that the Pennsylvania company was not a common carrier but an investment company. It owns all the holding company's stock.

In denying the Pennsylvania's motion to dismiss the complaint for want of jurisdiction, the commission said it was "clear that the Pennsylvania company acted solely in behalf of the Pennsylvania railroad in these transactions, and that the two corporations together constituted but a single party in interest."

"We assume that the former holds legal title, as a corporation, to the acquired stocks, and must, as a separate legal entity, take part in the divestment ordered," the commission said. "That these acquisitions of stock are within the intended prohibitions of the law we have no doubt."

The Pennsylvania has indicated through its president, W. W. Atterbury, that it would contest the order in the courts.

BANKERS TO HEAR DISCUSSION OF MORTGAGE ACT

Donald E. Bridgman of Minneapolis, one of the foremost authorities in the country on real estate law, is to tell a representative group of bankers and lawyers about a uniform real estate mortgage act at a dinner to be given Wednesday evening, Dec. 10, at the Palmer house. The dinner is being given under the auspices of the Chicago Mortgage Bankers association, which is seeking to find a solution for the foreclosure problem in Illinois.

Louis K. Boysen, vice president of the First Union Trust and Savings bank and president of the Mortgage Bankers association, states that since the first of the year 5,227 foreclosure suits have been filed in Cook county and that the number will probably reach 6,000. The sum involved is about $25,000,000. He believes help will be found in a modernized mortgage law for Illinois.

"Our present foreclosure laws are totally inadequate to cope with the situation," Mr. Boysen said. "To secure good title under our present foreclosure laws means heavy expense and delays varying from eighteen months to several years. As no one wishes to lend money or buy real eestate during the process of foreclosure, the properties shrink in value and carry other real estate values with them."

Offerings for Week Reach 80 Millions

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Dec. 6.—A moderate increase in new bonds and note financing occurred this week when the total of such financing reached $80,290,000. Last week new bond issues aggregated $59,474,000 and for the previous week the total was $109,230,000. During the corresponding week a year ago new issues of bonds and notes reached $164,200,000, which was the fourth highest weekly total in 1929.

The offering of $35,000,000 Toledo Light and Power company 2 year 5 per cent notes on a 5.25 per cent basis constituted the largest single piece of financing this week. The only other public utility financing was that of an issue of $3,000,000 Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co. 4¼s and 4½s, priced to yield 4.25 to 4.75 per cent.

Market $15,000,000.

Another issue of $15,000,000 Federal Intermediate Credit bank 3s due June 15 to Dec. 15, 1931, was marketed at prices to yield 2.75 to 3 per cent. Early in November an issue of $6,000,000 3 per cent short term obligations of the bank was offered at par.

New offerings of bonds, notes, and stocks in the United States during the eleven months ended Nov. 30, 1930, exclusive of domestic and Canadian municipals, aggregated $4,894,720,000, according to a compilation completed by Otto P. Schwarzschild, editor of American Underwriting Houses and Their Issues, and manager of the National Statistical Service. This total compares with $5,920,260,000 for the first eleven months of 1929.

Of the 1930 total, new bond and note issues accounted for $4,314,312,000, or more than 87 per cent, while stock issues amounted to only $580,408,000. Domestic public utility financing reached $1,737,648,000, or more than 35 per cent of the total offerings, with domestic railroad financing second with $716,270,000. Canadian and other foreign government and corporate financing combined aggregated $1,016,436,000 and new financing for financial and investment companies amounted to $283,420,000, of which more than 68 per cent represented bond and note financing.

Morgan House Leads.

J. P. Morgan & Co., according to the compilation, led the list of investment houses during the first eleven months of this year by heading syndicates amounting to $705,331,000. Harris, Forbes & Co., including the Harris Trust & Savings bank of Chicago, was second with $427,959,000, and Halsey, Stuart & Co., Inc., was third with $331,215,000.

From the standpoint of total business participated in, either as syndicate head or participant, Harris, Forbes & Co. accounted for the largest volume with $1,468,864,600. The National City company ranked second with $1,228,494,000, and Halsey, Stuart & Co., Inc., third with $1,101,975,600.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Dec. 6.—Lower prices were the rule in the short week-end session of the stock market. As on yesterday and the day before, selling pressure was concentrated against the rails, utilities and a number of specialties.

Numerous new lows for the year were recorded, conspicuous among them being New York Central, Case Threshing Machine, Erie Railroad, American Bosch Magneto, Atlas Powder, St. Paul preferred, Prairie Oil and Gas, Simms Petroleum, St. Louis and San Francisco, and Ward Baking preferred.

Trading was dull and listless throughout, volume totaling only 719,950 shares—one of the smallest of the year.

Bearish News Budget.

News with a market bearing continued at a premium, but such events as received the attention of the speculative community were hardly of a character calculated to promote enthusiasm on the buying side. Omission of several dividends, including payments on two investment trust preferred issues and one mining company stock had a dampening effect. Statistics on new construction now being undertaken over a large area of the country were also somewhat discouraging.

Although rumors were about that the monthly unfilled tonnage report of the United States Steel corporation to be made public next Wednesday would show an increase over November, steel prices continued to sag. The predicted increase seems a bit hard to reconcile with the trend of things in the steel trade here of late, but it was pointed out that with operations at their present low level it would not require a great volume of new bookings to bring about an appreciable increase in unfilled business. We Lend the Tools—
Jones Does the Work

Jones is about thirty-five years old, married, and has three children . . . He is in a good position, and is buying his home . . . He has always made it a point to save part of his income . . .

Last fall the kids got sick, and you know what that means . . . there was a trained nurse for almost three months, in addition to the doctors . . .

Jones might have been in a predicament . . . for he had used all the money in his savings account . . . and needed $400.00 besides . . .

Jones comes to the Personal Loan & Savings Bank . . . borrows $400.00 . . . pays back $8.00 a week out of his income . . . of course pays all his bills. At the end of the year he has not only paid back his loan . . . he has found it possible to lay aside an additional $15.00 a month in his savings account.

Your name may not be Jones, but you may borrow the tools and work out your own problem if you happen to be in a financial situation similar to Jones.

BUSINESS FOR LONDON BROKERS STILL JUST SO SO

Political Events Continue to Act as Brake.

BY SIDNEY CAVE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Dec. 6.—In the absence of any encouraging factors as the year nears a close affairs on the stock exchange account are proceeding in a heavy, dull atmosphere with little signs of shaking off the various adverse influences. These adverse influences are still keeping business from expanding, the only satisfactory feature being that the forced liquidation and associated clearing up of year end accounts are not reaching such large proportions as anticipated earlier.

Where appears to be little in the near future to stimulate public support, as the unsettled home political events continue to affect unfavorably the stock exchange sentiment. The hitherto popular gilt edged investment section turned definitely dull this week.

The general monetary situation induced some selling. The persistent demand for gold, the unfavorable tendency toward London of the principal foreign exchanges, the increasing flow of new capital issues, combine to create a condition of affairs that makes it questionable whether Chancellor of the Exchequer Philip Snowden's projected war debt conversion will be such an easy operation as it was believed a short time ago. The recent course of British funds points to the fact that strong support will be brought to action wherever the market shows signs of drooping.

Plenty of Funds.

Strong pressure for new capital issues still continues and although plenty of surplus funds are awaiting investment there is a possibility that any further new issue successes, such as were recently achieved, may start an unwelcome rush. But with commodity prices stiffening and the belief that they have reached the lowest probable levels market discussions are veering, and if a trade revival looms earlier than anticipated, Chancellor Snowden may miss his boat.

However, the general opinion is that the present reaction is likely to prove temporary, with the likelihood that gilt edged stocks will forge ahead again with the new year, assuming that no additional unfavorable monetary troubles occur unexpectedly.

Touch Low Levels.

Both the American and French exchange rates touched the lowest levels of the year this week. As a result the French demand for gold was keen as ever as was indicated by the advance in market price of fine gold to the highest point recorded since England reverted to a gold standard.

The fall of the New York rate brings the level not far above the point at which gold shipments from England to America might be profitable but it is generally believed that such a development will be avoided, especially as no gold has left this side for America during the year and as America is apparently not anxious to add to its stock of metal.

PARIS IS CALM

BY EDMOND TAYLOR.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Dec. 6.—The Paris market this week was, like for previous weeks, irregularly calm. Throughout the entire week prices changed little from those of previous sessions. But there was a sharp decline Friday following the downfall of the government headed by Andre Tardieu.

Contrary to all predictions in the Paris bourse, following the long awaited and in some circles the long feared month end settlement, nearly the entire list of stocks showed a remarkable firmness at the Monday session.

Receipts at Chicago for Monday are estimated at 21,000 cattle, 65,000 hogs, and 31,000 sheep.

Offerings of hogs on the week-end session were small, after directs had been deducted from the receipts and prices held firm with the general selling the previous day. Unevenness ranged from 10c lower to 10c higher, comparing extremes, the top at $8.30 showing 10c loss, while the general average remained unchanged at $8.15.

Prevailing quotations are mostly 10@15c under the close of the previous week, some top kinds showing 20@25c less for the week.

Packers have been buying freely at all country points lately. Yesterday's receipts at Chicago were estimated early at 20,000, and later at 22,000 to 23,000, including 20,000 directs from other points. Armour, Swift, and Wilson handled more than 21,000 head yesterday. Smaller interests bought readily at the close, in spite of the possibility of another liberal run on Monday.

Hog receipts during the last week showed a rather material increase over the preceding week, but demand was also broader and the general average price moved down only 5c at $8.20. A slight setback in the local wholesale market was partly offset by good shipping demand. Outsiders during the last two weeks have purchased 22 per cent of total arrivals.

A year ago 16 per cent went to shippers and two years ago only 13 per cent. Receipts, however, are still running below normal for the time of year. The eleven market total last week at 665,000 compares with 779,000 a year ago and with 821,000 two years ago. Only one corresponding week has been smaller since 1921.

Hog Futures Firm.

In spite of the reports that the cash trade looks for a fairly large run of hogs the first few days of next week, bids on the futures market were fully steady at the close of the week. March mediums offered at $9.00, while bids for March hogs were made at $8.00@9.10. February bids were made at $8.65. January contracts were offered at $8.80 and bid $8.65, while December hogs were offered at $8.30@8.40 and bid $8.10@8.20.

Considering the size of receipts last week, the cattle market made a good showing. The general average dropped 60c at $10.80, but only two weekly averages have been higher since October. Cattle prices are within $2.00 of a year ago and show gains of $1.75@2.50 since the low time less than five months ago.

The trend of the cattle market during the last few months has been higher, while during the same period in 1929 and 1928 sharp declines were recorded. At the low time last July, the general average was as much as $2.25 below the same period in 1929. Last week's total cattle receipts at the 20 leading markets at 252,000 show an increase of 48 per cent compared with the preceding week, which was due partly to the Thanksgiving holiday.

Lamb Market Stronger.

The lamb market moved to higher levels during the last week, in face of the largest receipts of fed western lambs this season. There was an increase of 50,000 head at 20 leading points, consisting largely of good grades of fat lambs. Yet prices equaled the highest in six weeks, the general average at $7.85 showing 60c gain in two weeks.

Only two weekly averages have been higher since the middle of September. Quotations, however, are still at previous levels, and some classes of fresh lambs on the wholesale market moved down ¼@1c per lb from the previous week's prices.

Receipts for Monday are estimated at 21,000 cattle, 65,000 hogs, and 30,000 sheep, against 27,041 cattle, 62,069 hogs, and 31,388 sheep a week ago. Last week's receipts are estimated at 31,000 cattle, 230,000 hogs, and 80,000 sheep, against 48,348 cattle, 224,712 hogs, and 80,034 sheep a year ago.

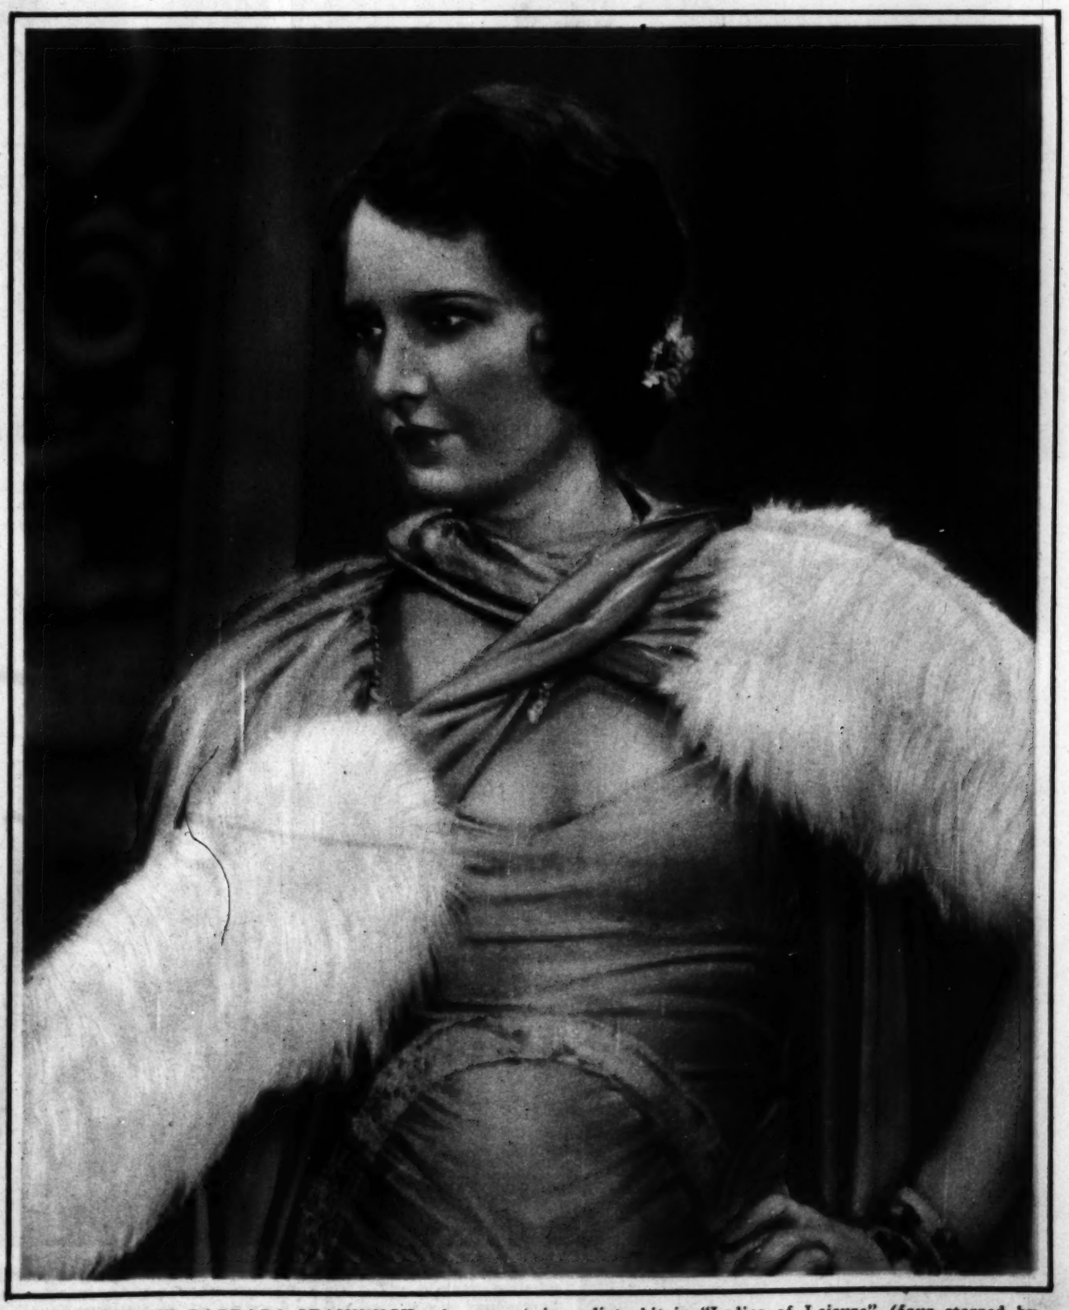
EVENING STARS: FEMININITY AND FORMALITY IN CINEMALAND

EVELYN LAYE, star of musical comedy, is introduced in this page of faces and fashions as a comparative newcomer to moviedom, thanks to the Hollywood contract which brings her fair English beauty to the screen.

THE EYES HAVE IT—What guides that bewitching siren of make believe, Myrna Loy, in choice of gown and jewels so subtly suited to exotic charms? Unerring discrimination or, perhaps, woman's intuition?

TWO LITTLE RUFFLES, gracing the shoulders of lovely Bernice Claire, breathe that new fashioned air of old fashioned winsomeness; she might be, it can be believed, on the point of singing—well—something simple.



BRILLIANT BARBARA STANWYCK, who was an immediate hit in "Ladies of Leisure" (four starred by Mae Tinee), supplies the last word to that eternal question of what the woman of savoir-faire wears to "functions."

GIFTS

These are Perfumes which women themselves, the world over, prefer to all others—to give them is to give the greatly desired. The aura of luxury, of preciousness, the artistic detail of each flacon and its box or leather case, the matchless glory of the Coty fragrance—together with their exquisite usefulness—make a presentation which reflects perfect taste informed with subtle understanding. And they are not necessarily costly—there are charming "Purse Sizes" for as little as one dollar, or elaborate Ensembles for as much as two hundred and seventy-five dollars—but all of the same supreme quality.

Coty

THE PERFUMES—L'Origan, "Paris„ and the other classic COTY fragrances, in smart colored leather cases or silken tasseled boxes, $6.75 to $7.50; in metal cases, $1.50. L'Aimant, shark skin effect box, $5.00
THE COFFRETS—Purse Requisites, platinum-tone metal, $5.00. Perfume Ensemble, with metal case, $3.00
THE PERFUMED MANICURE—Ensemble of Perfumed Manicure Essentials, $5.00. Others, $4.00 and $3.00
THE MASCULINE GIFT—Shaving Cream, Lotion and Talc, $2.50. Other Men's Sets, $3.50 and $6.00

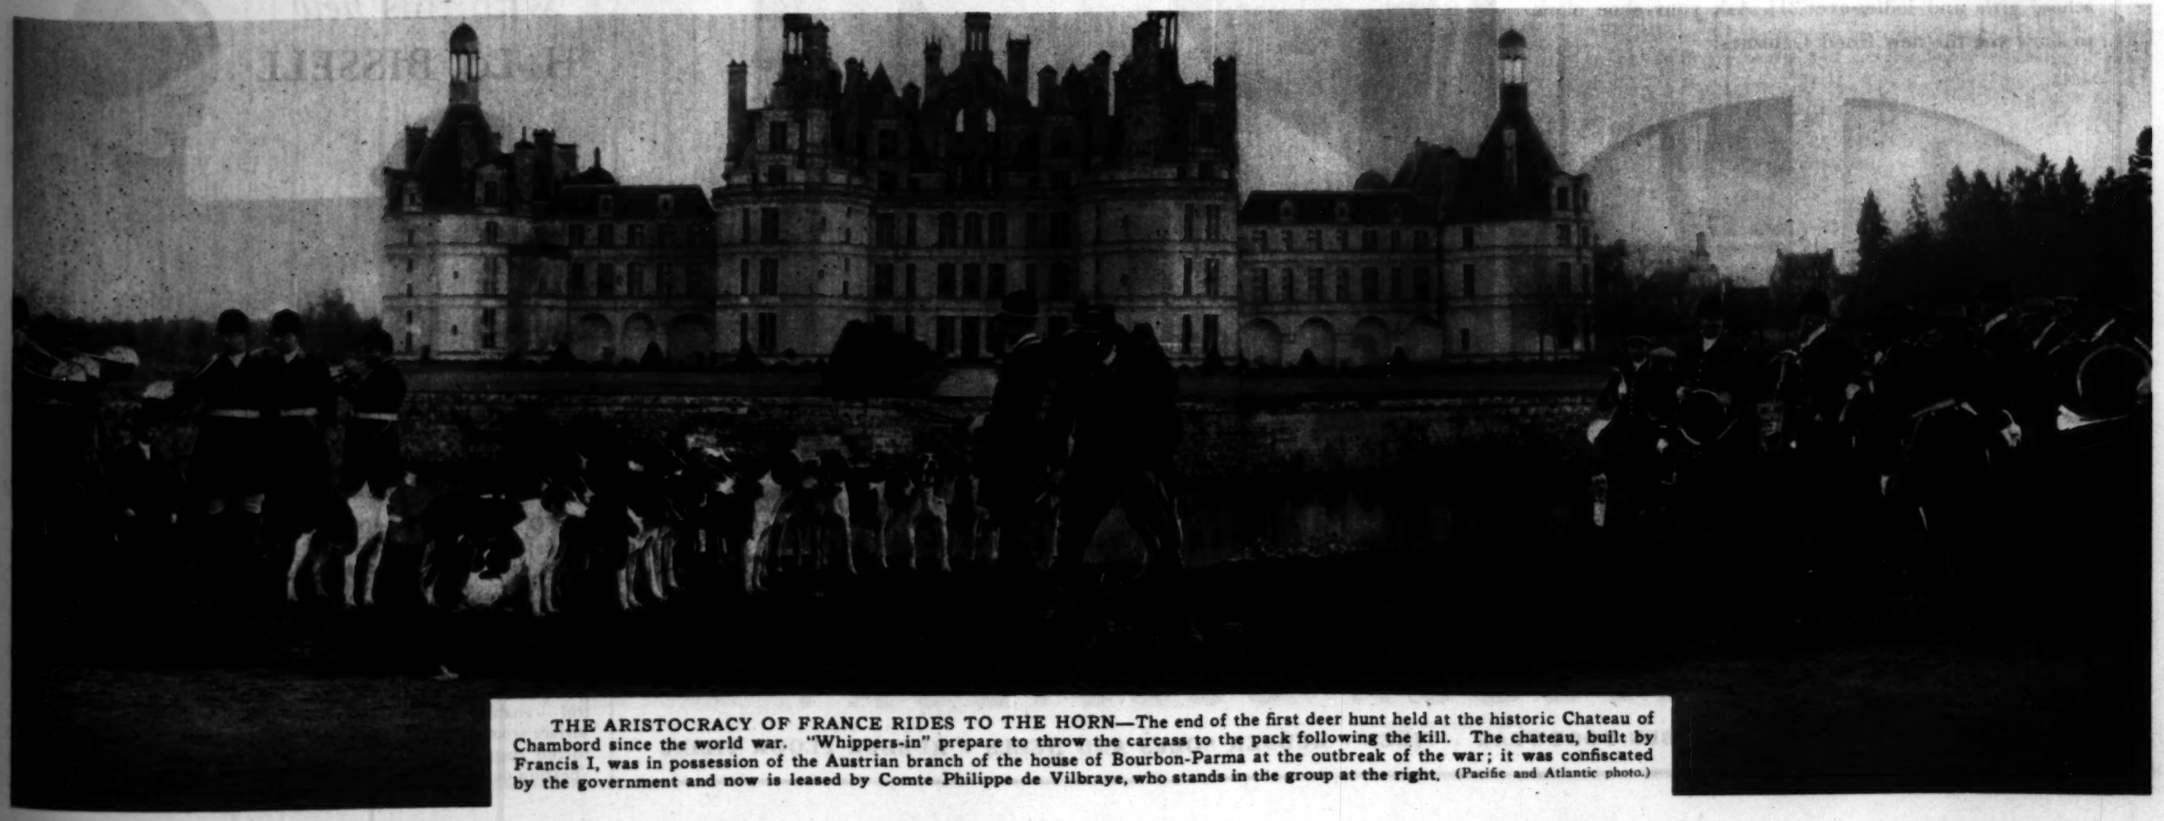
NEW YORK PARIS LONDRES BRUXELLES BERLIN VIENNE MONTREAL BUENOS-AIRES SHANGHAI MANILLE SAN JUAN, P. R. BUCAREST

THE RUMBLINGS OF UPHEAVAL IN SPAIN—Employes of the Madrid telephone company walk out, participating in the general strike which paralyzed Alfonso's land and roused such fears of revolution that heavy armed forces were placed on guard about the royal palace. Widespread rioting and mob violence throughout the country resulted in a wave of death. (Wide World photo.)

A DEMONSTRATION OF ALLEGIANCE TO THE MEXICAN REGIME—Eight thousand sportsmen assemble in front of the national palace in Mexico City and pledge loyalty to President Ortiz Rubio as a feature of a week of festival dedicated to sports. (Wide World photo.)

UNCLE SAM'S NEW ENVOY TO MEXICO TAKES HIS POST—Ambassador J. Reuben Clark and Mrs. Clark arrive in Mexico City. (Associated Press photo.)

FASHION DECREES THE TIN DERBY FOR THE WELL DRESSED FIREMAN—Battalion Chief J. Fred Miller of the Pasadena, Cal., fire department inspects smoke eaters hatted with an evolution of the wartime steel helmet. (Wide World photo.)



THE ARISTOCRACY OF FRANCE RIDES TO THE HORN—The end of the first deer hunt held at the historic Chateau of Chambord since the world war. "Whippers-in" prepare to throw the carcass to the pack following the kill. The chateau, built by Francis I, was in possession of the Austrian branch of the house of Bourbon-Parma at the outbreak of the war; it was confiscated by the government and now is leased by Comte Philippe de Vilbraye, who stands in the group at the right. Enter . . "SILK-STOCKING FIT"

the amazing new idea in Galoshes introduced by HOOD

First—look at the slim ankles and smartly shod feet, pictured on the left! Now—see how these same feet and ankles retain all their trim, slender smartness, when clad in the new Hood Galosh. Here is an amazing improvement in galosh fit. Galoshes actually made to fit with all the flattering smoothness of your silk stockings!

IMAGINE—galoshes that shape themselves to your foot and ankle as neatly and smoothly as a silk stocking! Yet you can have them now. For after repeated experiments Hood has found a way to give their galosh uppers an entirely new flexibility. A new clinging stretchableness that insures "Silk-Stocking Fit"!

Very timely, too, is this improvement in galoshes—now that longer skirts give new importance to ankles. In these new Hood Galoshes you can be just as trimly and smartly shod on rainy days as sunny ones!

Then, there is a Hood Galosh with the exact heel-mate of any shoe you want to wear; with an upper to harmonize with the favored colors of the season. And in sizes to fit every feminine member of the family—children, school girls and ladies-over-21! Ask your shoe clerk to show you the new Hood Galoshes!

Christmas!

Replace Mother's out-of-date sweeper with this new "HI-LO" BISSELL

MODERN mothers find the carpet sweeper the handiest, easiest way to keep rugs and carpets clean of everyday dirt, lint and litter. Housekeeping authorities advise it.

Now the famous Bissell sweeper that your mother knew has been doubled in usefulness. A new improvement—"Hi-Lo" Brush Control—enables you to sweep any surface from bare floors to thickest tufted rugs—easier! No hard "bearing down" on the handle.

Why not use the old sweeper upstairs and get a modern, improved Bissell for Christmas? Ask your dealer to demonstrate the new model. Bissells with "Hi-Lo" Brush Control (on all "Cyco" models) cost only the price of a few brooms—$5.50 and up (50 cents more in west and south). At furniture, department and leading hardware stores. The Bissell Booklet mailed on request. Bissell Carpet Sweeper Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.

THE SEAL OF SUPERIORITY IS IMITATION

Look for the label on the waistband of Faultless Nobelt Pajamas. . . . Pajamas with thread-elastic imitations of the Nobelt are being offered in some stores

SUPREME SLEEPING COMFORT . . . perfect fit . . . complete convenience . . . guaranteed long life—these are the qualities which distinguish Faultless Nobelt Pajamas.

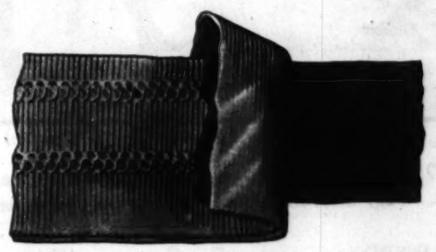
In place of the old-fashioned, awkward drawstring, Faultless Pajamas are equipped with a flat and flexible waistband of live sheet-rubber—the Nobelt—enclosed in soft webbing. So gentle is the pressure of the Nobelt that it can scarcely be detected by the wearer, yet it subtly yields—breathes—with every motion, keeping pajama trousers accurately and permanently in place. It is guaranteed never to lose its resilience.

Comfort of the sort offered by Faultless Pajamas was unknown before invention of the Nobelt. Its sweeping popularity has resulted in imitations. The Nobelt, however, is protected by patent, so that no men's pajama manufacturer in the United States except Faultless can use it. The diagram at the right explains briefly the inferiority of these imitations. Look for the Nobelt label on the waistband. It is your protection.

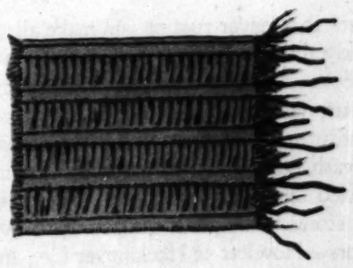
A Christmas gift that no man fails to appreciate

Faultless Pajamas, as Christmas gifts, offer you an opportunity both to express fully your individual taste, and to send your friends gifts of rare, lasting usefulness. . . . Haberdashers' and men's wear departments everywhere carry full stocks of Faultless Nobelts. You will find models in every combination of material, color and design—to suit every purse. . . . The Faultless Manufacturing Company, Faultless Square, Baltimore, Md. Chicago Sales Office, 209 South State Street; New York City Sales Office, 452 Fifth Avenue (at 40th Street); Los Angeles Sales Office, 720 Haas Building (7th and Broadway).

The Nobelt feature is covered by a broad guarantee. If your Nobelt waistband should lose its resilience, we will replace the entire garment without formality or delay. A guarantee slip to this effect will be found in every pair of Faultless Nobelt Pajamas.



Construction of the Faultless Nobelt waistband: a broad, flat band of live sheet-rubber, encased in resilient webbing. The sheet-rubber gives equal resilience to the entire band and is under no tension until you put on the garment. This results in the gentle, even pressure that can scarcely be felt by the wearer, and prevents loss of elasticity.



Construction of waistband made from ordinary elastic: note that the only resilience is supplied by a few rubber threads. To supply sufficient tension, these rubber threads must be stretched about 100% when in the waistband, which subjects them to early deterioration, and causes them to press into the flesh, leaving marks upon the skin.

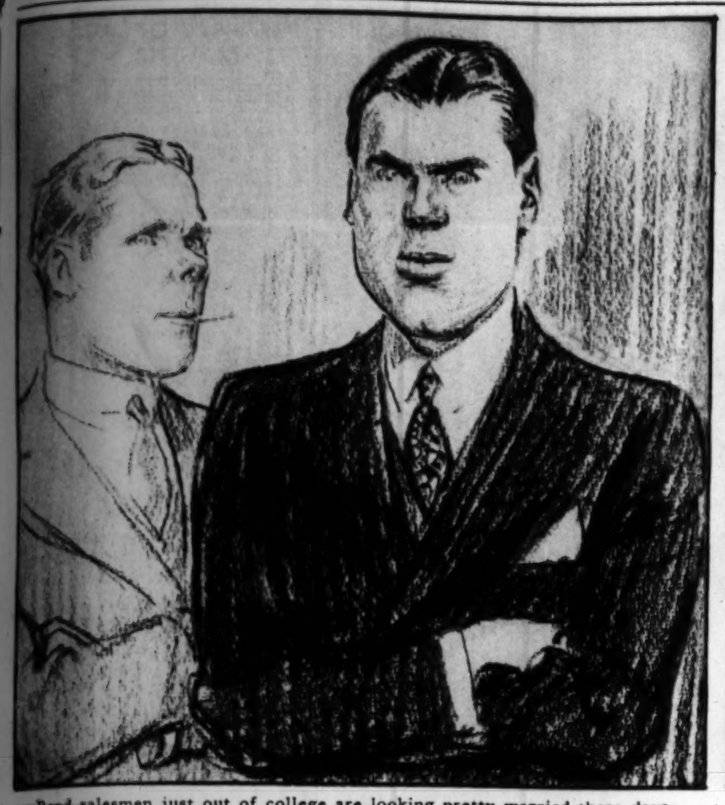
HARD TIMES

By W. E. Hill

[Copyright: 1930: By The Chicago Tribune.]



Bond salesmen just out of college are looking pretty worried these days. With all these rumors of bond salesmen being dropped from the pay roll on account of hard times, a college education seems almost a waste of energy.

"It doesn't seem as though unemployment really can be as bad as people make out. Because yesterday I went to my dentist and he said there wasn't a tooth in my mouth to be filled, and that hasn't happened in years, Elsie, dear!"

Hard times sales talk. "Only yesterday," Mr. Smack, who sells insurance, is saying, "a man I knew died of a terrible ailment and his wife and eleven children were left penniless to starve in the gutter because he had never taken out a cent's worth of insurance."

Portrait of a lady, who, fired with the spirit of giving, after reading about the hard times in the news sheets, has been to the Salvation Army with three straw hats, two pairs of sneakers, a pillow muff, six feet and a half of rubber garden hose, one-half pair of pajamas, and a copy of "Chafing Dish Tidbits."

Ensemble girls have been terribly hard hit by the present depression on the stock market. A few short years ago a girl could be reasonably certain that Santa Claus would say it with black lynx or platinum, but the present Yuletide will see her playboy friend handing out nothing more elaborate than the summer wolf, or maybe a bit of antique "silver" jewelry. (Third from the left in this pretty grouping is lovely Leelia Grasp, about to miss out on some clever team work, having sighted a silver half dollar rolling down the center aisle.)

A sure harbinger of hard times is the increasing number of girl friends who have to go to court in order to retain possession of presents bestowed by boy friends, who have felt the pinch of a money shortage and want their baubles back. You'd be surprised at the misunderstandings that arise.

Here's Mr. Bernard Bye of the local merchants' first aid committee about to deliver an inspiring talk over the radio advising every one to buy and spend lavishly in order to end the hard times.

The hard luck story. This heartrending scene will be enacted in many homes during the winter of our financial discontent. Mr. Alvin Clingstone, his mother-in-law, and his wife are listening to Cousin Abel's boy Lawton telling a hard luck tale for a purpose. Whether the purpose will be fulfilled remains to be seen, because Mr. Clingstone is not being left alone one minute by said mother-in-law and wife.

Saturday night in town, showing sad eyed farmer, who couldn't dispose of his apple crop because of nature's overproduction, ogling the 10 cent apples displayed in a fruit vendor's window. It's a cruel world, boy!

This New, Improved Turpo Electric Vaporizer

The new, 1930 Model of the sensational Turpo Electric Vaporizer is now being featured by druggists everywhere. Just plug the cord into a light socket. In two minutes you have a warm, healing vapor that spells quick relief to head and chest colds, asthma, congestion and similar complaints.

This new, improved Turpo Electric Vaporizer is so simple, so amazingly effective that thousands are forsaking old-fashioned, haphazard cold treatments, and hundreds are replacing the original vaporizers that last year gave them a new conception of cold relief.

See for Yourself

You can feel this Turpo vapor reach the spot. The first breath will convince you that finally you have found real help for colds. You will inhale a vapor so potent, so profuse, so ideally adapted to its purpose that each breath carries the true essence of Turpentine, Menthol and Camphor direct to the sore, inflamed, congested membranes of the nose, throat and chest. Improvement is immediate. Your head clears, congestion is relieved, breathing becomes free, and shortly the cold breaks up.

So Simple—So Easy—So Quick

Consider the convenience of this new cold aid. No fuss or trouble. No greasy hands or soiled linen. No nasty-tasting mixtures or messy salves.

Just fill the vaporizer with water to the line on the jar. Add one teaspoonful of Turpo. Plug cord into light socket—that's all. In two minutes, quicker than you can boil water over a stove, vapor will form and continue to form for twenty-five minutes. New jar of scientific design prevents boiling over, eliminates breakage.

Consider its uses—in the sickroom, at night, at office, at home. Not only ideal for adults but mothers find it invaluable for children's colds, hacking coughs and croup.

Even a sick child thinks it fun to inhale this beneficial Turpo vapor.

Use Only Turpo in Turpo Electric Vaporizer

It is the combination of Turpo, used in the Electric Vaporizer that produces the results. Turpo has proved itself the nation's vaporizing ointment. For over ten years it has established itself as a product of merit. We cannot guarantee the Turpo Electric Vaporizer to work or to be of help if any other product is used. When purchasing refills or when using your vaporizer, be sure to use only Turpo, the genuine Vaporizing Ointment.

How to get

8 Hours Sleep Tonight

Utterly Without Drugs

Teeming Energy All Day Tomorrow

A Way That Not Only Brings Instant Sleep; But Builds New Energy While You Sleep!

YOU fall asleep almost as soon as you go to bed. And all the next day, teem with new energy and "pep". You look and feel like a different person.

On doctor's advice, millions employ this new way. For it is as free of drugs as the bread you eat or the milk you drink. And does far more than simply induce sleep! This delicious food-drink actually rebuilds your wasted tissues while you sleep.

What It Is

It is called Ovaltine; a scientific food-concentrate developed in Switzerland by a scientist of world-fame. You take it in a cup of warm milk at bedtime; a super-delicious drink.

First, it induces sleep. You get sound, natural sleep a few minutes after taking it.

Then, while you sleep, its peculiar dietetic properties resupply your system with the energy lost the previous, active day. For it contains practically EVERY element necessary to vitality and energy. And thus provides not only sleep, but the kind of sleep that rebuilds and rejuvenates!

You can take it night after night and not only not form a habit, as with drugs—but actually build up your health! And so you teem with energy every day.

Do you wonder then, that people are flocking to its use? New to America, Ovaltine is being recommended by over 20,000 doctors. Used over 30 years in Europe, its use has spread to over 54 different nations. It marks one of the most important scientific findings of its time.

Try It Tonight

Doctors urge it not only for sleeplessness, but for all nervous and rundown conditions. They recommend it, too, for nervous, underweight children. Thousands of busy people take it during the day to relieve fatigue and restore vitality. Widely different from powdered, sugary, chocolate, malt or cocoa "mixtures", its scientific standing is unquestioned.

A few weeks' use will make an amazing difference in the way you feel. Your whole appearance will show the result of restful sleep and vitality restored this natural way.

Believe or not what people claim for Ovaltine—but try it. Try it without delay. Start tonight. Just 'phone your druggist or grocer now—ask for a can of Ovaltine. 786

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Many people have asked us, "Does Ovaltine contain any drugs?" It is such a wonderful "night-cap" they feel it "simply must" contain something in the nature of a drug. In short, it works so well they sometimes "wonder" about it. So we wish to go on record here in public print, that Ovaltine has never at any time contained any sleep-producing drug of any kind whatsoever. It is made entirely from food and nothing but food. The government would not permit us to make such a statement in public print unless it could be proved beyond a doubt.

YOU JUDGE! Place ordinary cleansing cream on hand. Note "lard-like" look. How it stays "solid." Then beside it put Hinds Cleansing Cream. Watch it melt the moment it touches skin. Then remember this: Heavy cleansing creams that go on skin like lard may stretch skin . . . cause pore enlargement.

New facts about

SKIN CARE . . .

NOW, after three years of research, a new way of skin care has been found.

Scientists working at the Hinds Laboratories developed it.

Their findings are embodied in three products, a cleansing cream, a pore refiner and a softening cream.

Hinds Cleansing Cream

A remarkable new cleansing cream that actually changes from a solid to a liquid on contact with skin heat!

Note, please, that it is utterly unlike old-type "heavy" cleansing creams that go on skin like lard, and require strenuous rubbing which may stretch pores.

Hinds Toning Cleanser

Here's a way to refine pores in a remarkably short time.

You use a liquid which is both a cleanser and a solvent. Hinds Toning Cleanser, it is called.

First, it thoroughly cleans surface of skin. Then enters pores and dissolves out accumulated pore residue. Relieved of this residue, pores shrink back to normal size.

Hinds Texture Cream

A light, delicate cream you apply at night . . . it is utterly unlike "greasy" softening creams. Hence you retire with face smooth and lovely.

Absorbed rapidly by the skin, this scientifically compounded cream counteracts tight, drawn feeling of skin, scaliness, dryness.

Skin regains smooth, dewy texture of youth.

NORTH STAR BLANKETS
(PURE WOOL)

IT isn't so easy to tell the North Star Blanket story. If you keep to the truth, you must use superlatives, since everything that goes into their making is superlatively fine. Way back, in the days of the Civil War, the founders of the North Star Woolen Mill thought that was the way to make blankets, started doing it, and have been undeviatingly at it in this way ever since. What do we now have? A line of blankets of surpassing loveliness for every possible use to which a blanket may be put. Yes, they are truly very, very beautiful. On Sale in Your Local Store. The Perfect Christmas Gift

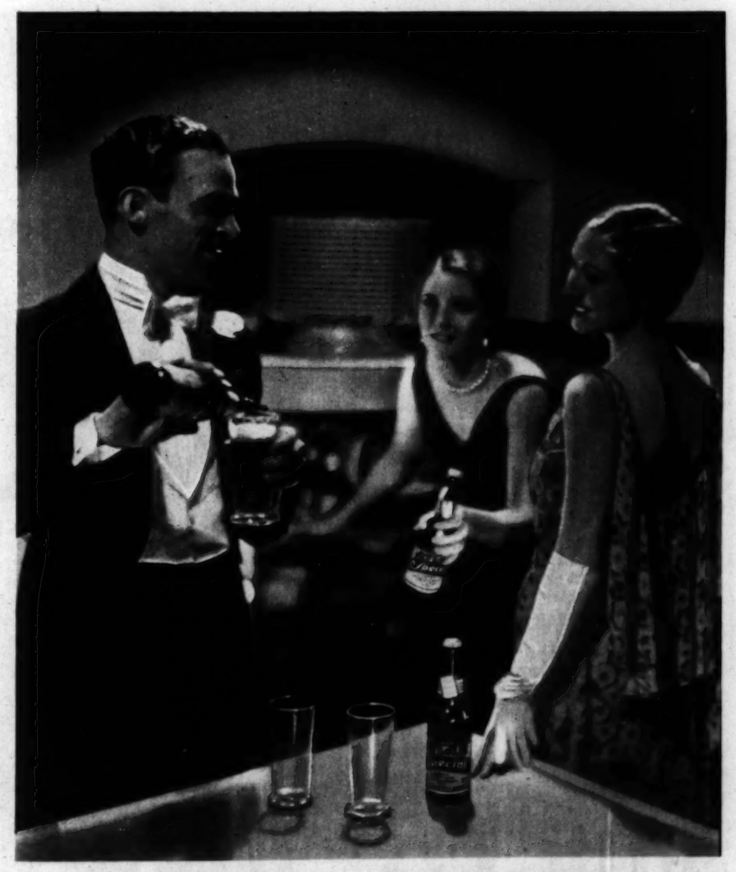
Don't deny yourself the joys of BEER



If you miss beer, it is only because you do not know these facts:

There is a brew, called Atlas Special Brew, which is even better than the best of old. It is made by the same masters who made Atlas Beer, always famous in Chicago. And they take special care, so you won't miss beer.

Not a "near-beer," without age or zest. We use the old-time process, skill and materials. But now we treat the water, so you get here the mellow flavor of famous European brews.

Flavor, Tang and Zest

After the brewing we evaporate most of the alcohol. But you don't miss that. If you compared this brew before and after the alcohol removal, you could not tell the difference.

Alcohol was only a small factor in good beer. What people liked in beer was the foam and flavor, the sparkle and the zest. They liked it in the evenings as a social drink, at dinners as a help to digestion, at night as an aid to sleep.

All those delights remain to you in Atlas Special Brew. And few have ever tasted an old-time brew as good.

Don't Spoil This Joy

Don't turn to rank substitutes. Atlas Special Brew will bring back at their best all the helps and joys of old. Just be sure of the name—Atlas Special Brew. A famous laboratory, on every bottle, certifies its purity.

It costs only 15c a bottle, much less by the case of 24 bottles, delivered to your door. Just ask your dealer or phone us. Over 30,000 grocers, delicatessen stores and drug stores in Chicago and surrounding states supply it. Look for the green Atlas Special label on each bottle. Atlas Brewing Company, 2107 Blue Island Avenue, Chicago, Ill. CHICAGO'S CENTURY OF ARCHITECTURAL PROGRESS

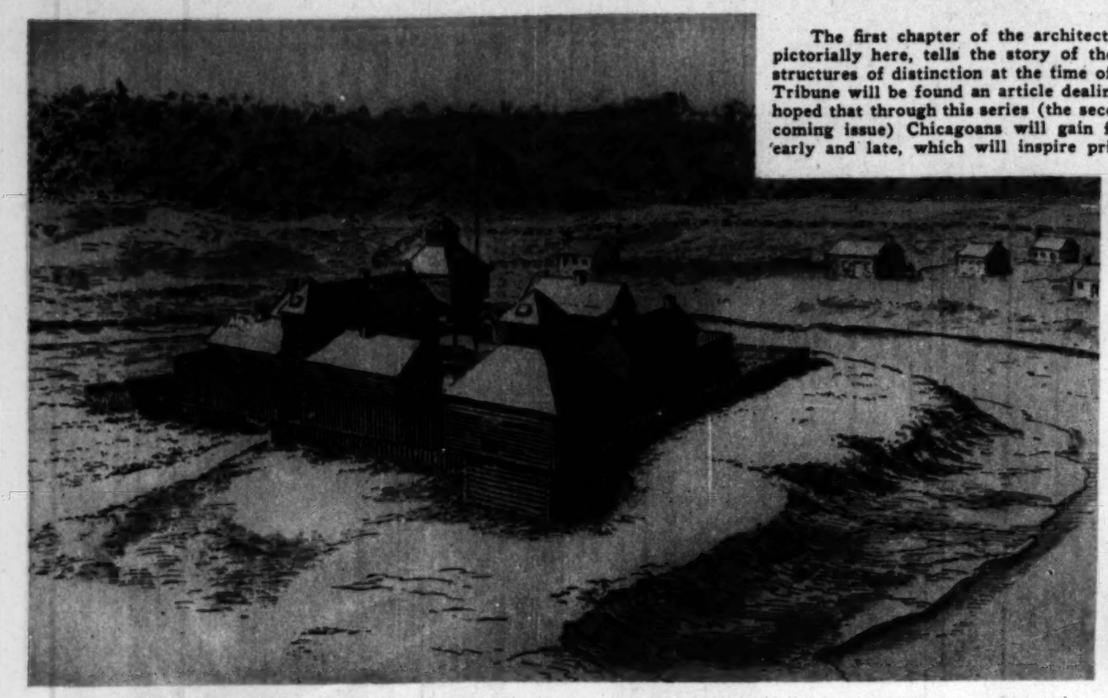
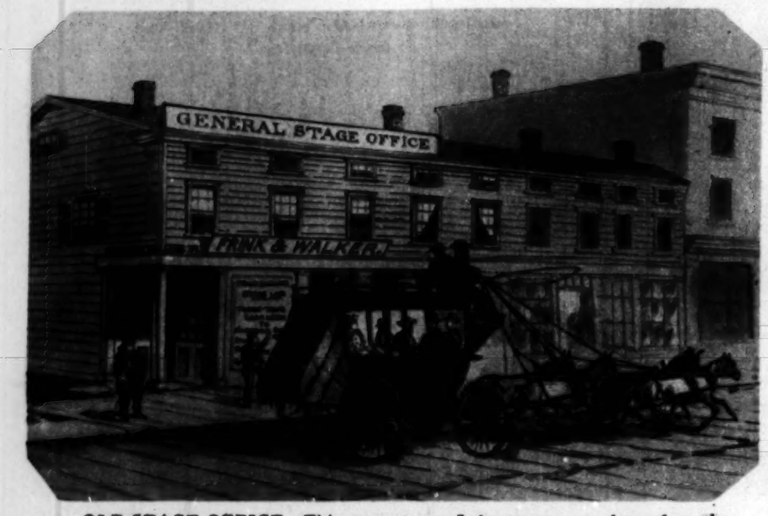
(To be presented in four periods, of which this, the first, extends from the founding to the time of the fire in 1871.)

The first chapter of the architectural story of Chicago, in part set forth pictorially here, tells the story of the city's rise from humble beginnings to structures of distinction at the time of the fire. In another section of today's Tribune will be found an article dealing with this architectural epoch . . . It is hoped that through this series (the second page of which will appear in a forthcoming issue) Chicagoans will gain fuller knowledge of Chicago's buildings, early and late, which will inspire pride in the achievement of its builders.



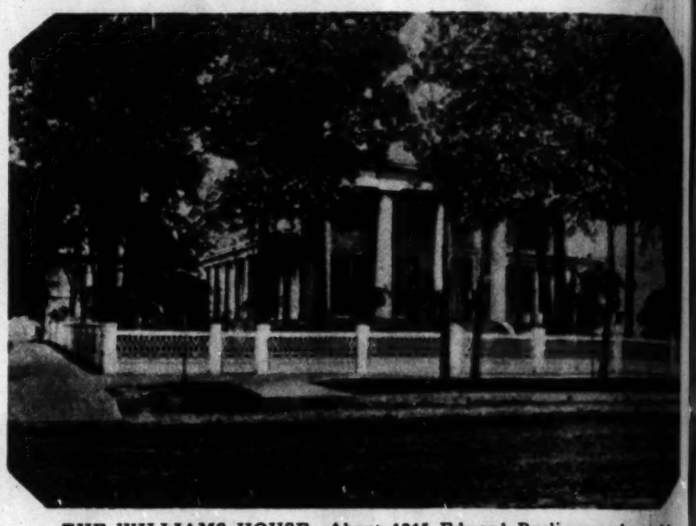
FORT DEARBORN—Capt. John Whistler built the first Fort Dearborn in 1803. It was a triumph of frontier architecture and also the first important Chicago structure. Grouped nearby were several rude cabins, one of which, belonging to Kinzie, the trader, marked the site of Point de Sable's original hut of 1779. Though not an architect, De Sable was, nevertheless, the first Chicago builder. (Chicago Historical society photo.)

THE CLYBOURNE MANSION—Built in 1836 on the river near North avenue, this residence was not colonial, as is popularly supposed of midwest architecture of this type, but rather reflected Greco-Roman or classic revival models in the south and east. This earliest of brick structures marks the definite emergence of Chicago from the pioneer stage and its frontier craftsmanship. (Chicago Historical society photo.)



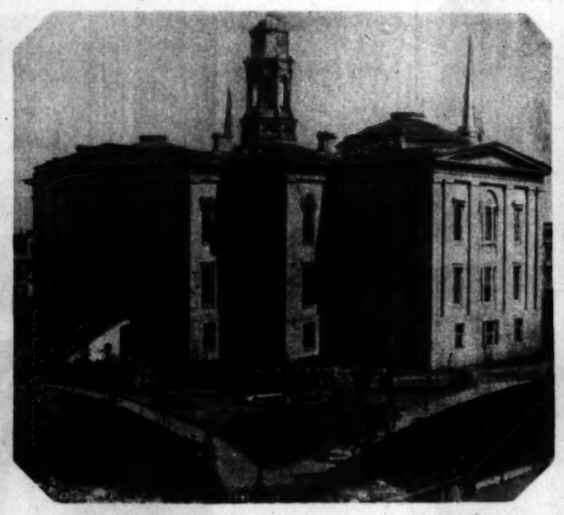
OLD STAGE OFFICE—This structure on Lake street, a product of another age of transportation, was in the heart of the business district of the forties. Balloon frame construction, probably used here, was developed in Chicago. Neat cornice returns on the end and the small attic windows of this building are earmarks of the classic revival in our region. (Chicago Historical society photo.)

THE OLD MARKET HALL—In 1848 this structure was erected by the city in the center of State street south of Randolph at a cost of about $11,000. Van Osdel, the architect, provided market stalls below and common council accommodations above. A curiously flamboyant belfry crowned this structure, which was so commandingly located. (Chicago Historical society photo.)



THE WILLIAMS HOUSE—About 1845 Edward Burling, early architect, designed this residence at Monroe street and Wabash avenue. Greek temple fronted houses like this exemplified the architectural yearnings of the forties to be more Greek than the Greeks. Magnificent trees justified the phrase on Chicago's seal, "Urbs in Horto"—city in a garden. (Chicago Historical society photo.)

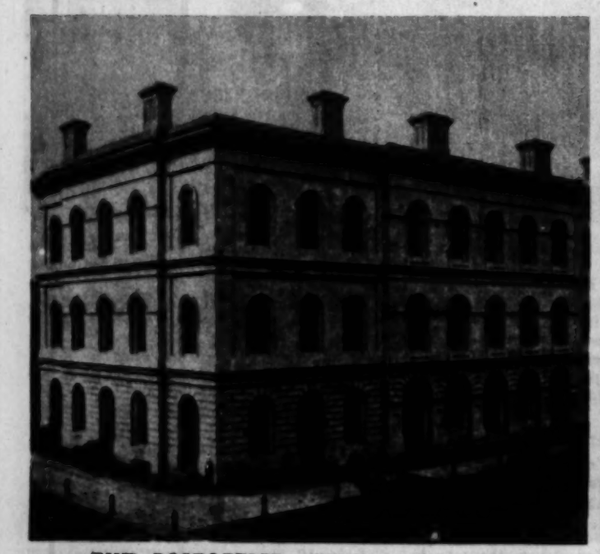
TREMONT HOUSE—It was a chief ornament of the city of 1850. Designed by our first architect, J. M. Van Osdel, in a classic revival spirit, it shows the beginnings, by the use of brackets, of a decadence which led toward the atrocities brought forth by the seventies. (Photo from Felix Mendelsohn.)



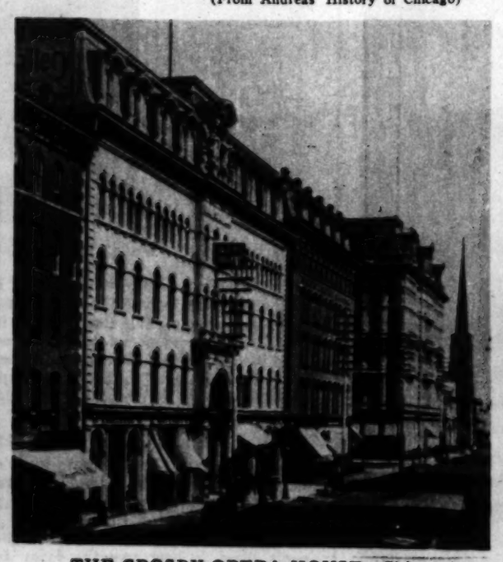
THE SECOND COURTHOUSE—A daguerreotype showing Courthouse square from the northwest in 1855. Van Osdel's finest work, a noble classic design in Lockport "marble," it was just complete. It was soon defaced with wings and a third floor. An excellent little Greek courthouse of 1835 formerly stood near by. (From Andreas' History of Chicago)

METROPOLITAN HALL—Successor to the old Saloon building, it occupied the corner of Randolph and La Salle streets from 1854 until the fire. This graceful building sheltered the important musical and literary activities of the time. Here Ole Bull and Adelina Patti performed. (Photo from Felix Mendelsohn.)

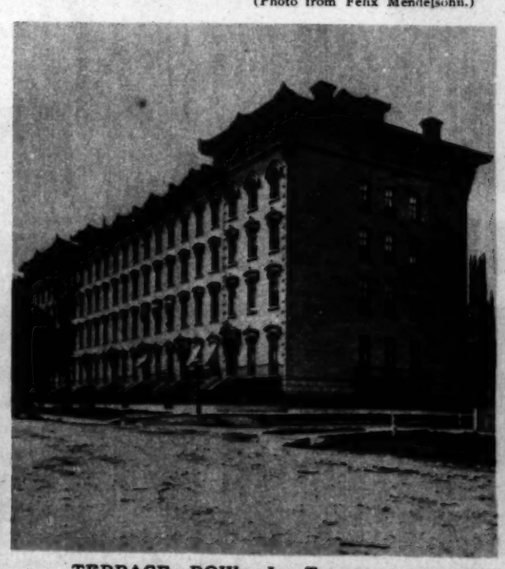
THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH—W. W. Boyington built the church across from the courthouse in 1854, but it was re-erected at Monroe and Morgan streets during the sixties. Now the Aiken institute, it remains today an interesting survival of the fire. The fine stone belfry formerly supported a spire of great delicacy. (Tribune photo.)



THE POSTOFFICE—This postoffice and custom house stood on the corner northwest of the present structure from 1860 until 1871. Excellently constructed, its walls survived the fire. Though somewhat monotonous, it was, nevertheless, restrained in taste—in grateful contrast to the overembellished type of building of the post-fire era. (Chicago Historical society photo.)



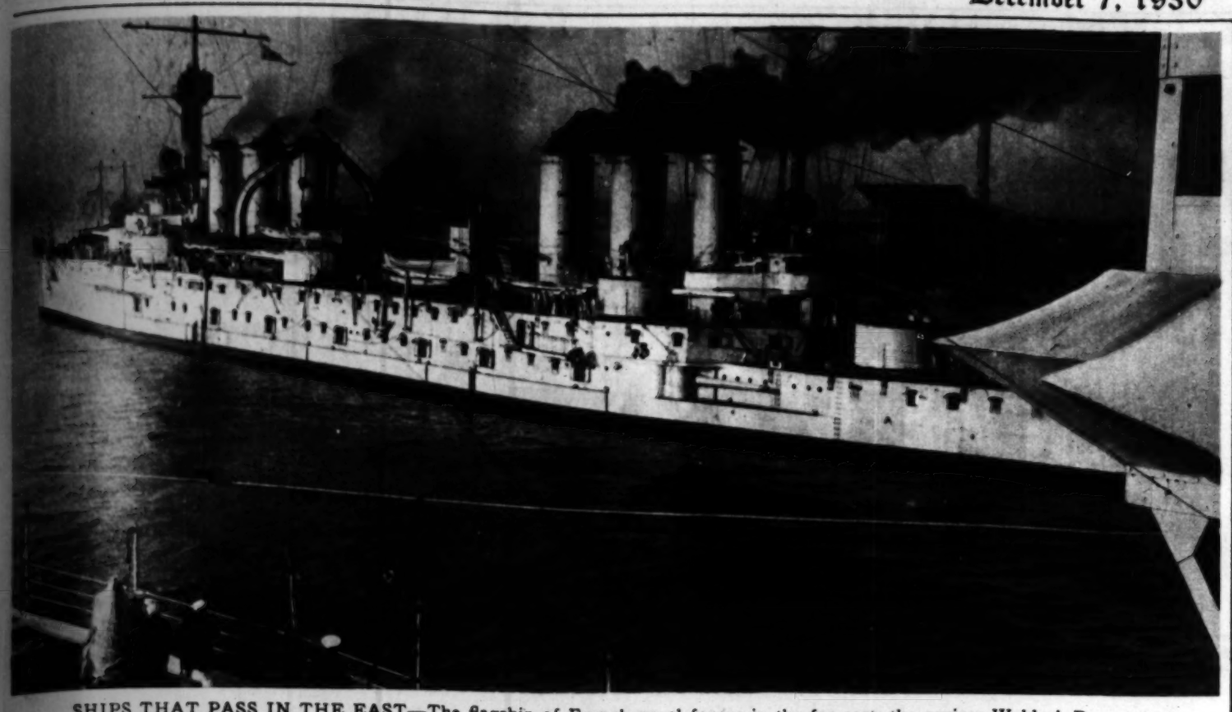
THE CROSBY OPERA HOUSE—Chicago's most extravagant ambitions were embodied architecturally in this theater of 1865. The view is along the north side of Washington street toward the lake, with Leiter's store and the Second Presbyterian church at the right. (Photo from Felix Mendelsohn.)



TERRACE ROW—In Terrace row, on Michigan near Van Buren, there lived in the sixties such eminent families as the Scammons, Kings, and Dyers. Other streets had splendid residences, too, decadently Victorian, perhaps, but marking dramatic progress. (Photo from Felix Mendelsohn.)

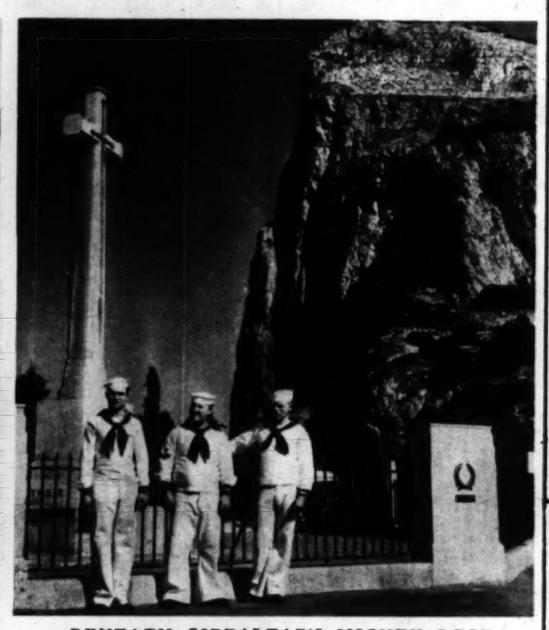
THE OLD MARINE HOSPITAL—Seventy-one's "Demon of Desolation" is here seen at work near Rush street and the river. The hospital was consumed, but the freight house and the grain elevator beyond remain, with Boyington's Water Tower further north, as reminders of ante-fire architectural glory.

[Prepared by Earl H. Reed Jr. of the committee on public information, Chicago chapter, American Institute of Architects, Eugene Klaber, chairman.]



SHIPS THAT PASS IN THE EAST—The flagship of French naval forces in the far east, the cruiser Waldeck-Rousseau, is an impressive sight from the decks of the new American cruiser Northampton as it steams into port at Shanghai, China. This photograph and the two below were sidelights of the Northampton's "shakedown" cruise.

SEEING THE WORLD—Three bluejackets of the Northampton's crew make the acquaintance of a little old French lady with a talent for juggling near Tourrettes, on the Riviera.



BENEATH GIBRALTAR'S MIGHTY ROCK—Jackies from the Northampton at the Cross of Sacrifice erected to the memory of British war dead.

Don't envy happy, vigorous women. If you tire quickly, catch cold easily, it is because your resistance is low. A vital element is missing from your diet.

Now is the time to build health and strength to resist disease. It is dangerous to drift through the winter months in a weakened, run-down condition.

For over 75 years thousands of women have proved the marvelous properties of Father John's Medicine. It supplies in pleasant form the vitamins necessary to health and strength. Following its use, listless, underweight women gain in weight and strength, pale cheeks glow with color, hollows fill out, and colds become few and far between.

Countless women take it regularly because they know that Father John's Medicine is a scientific combination of proved body builders, none of which could harm an infant. It contains no alcohol or drugs. Each bottle bears a certificate of analysis proving its purity and potency. One hundred and eighty-four hospitals and institutions throughout the country have used it for years. Scientific biological tests have demonstrated its effectiveness.

Because of its composition and its method of manufacture Father John's Medicine is of exceptional value. It contains just the right amount of cod liver oil in the right form to do the most good. Its food elements are so completely broken up that they are finer than those in cow's milk. Therefore it is quickly and easily assimilated by even the most delicate stomach. And it actually tastes good!

Don't delay another day. Try Father John's Medicine just once. Give it a chance to demonstrate what it can do for you. Your druggist will be glad to supply you.

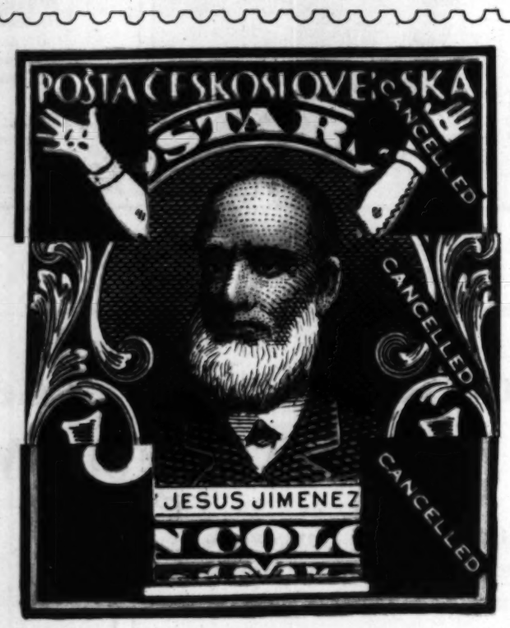
$10,000.00 IN CASH PRIZES

This is SET No.10



This is the Stamp of:

Write name of Nation here

CLUE: Prague is the capital of the nation which issued the upper part of this stamp; the portion of a stamp shown in the center is representative of a nation of Central America, part of which is a high tableland with mild temperature, while seacoast is low and climate tropical. A nation famous for its scenery issued the stamp shown at the bottom.

YMB

This is the Stamp of:

Write name of Nation here

CLUE: The Pacific ocean forms the western boundary of the nation indicated by the upper part of this stamp. The central part of the stamp is representative of a nation popularly called "The Playground of Europe." Prof. T. G. Masaryk was the first president of the republic represented by the bottom part of this composite stamp.

This is the Stamp of:

Write name of Nation here

CLUE: The League of Nations holds its meetings in one of the best known cities of the country represented by the upper part of this stamp; the central portion is that of a stamp issued by a nation of which the former Bohemia is a part. The 84th degree of west longitude crosses the nation which issued the stamp shown at the bottom.

• THE RULES •

1. Every Sunday for 14 Sundays, the Chicago Tribune will print in this "Stamp Album," a set of 3 composite "Stamps of the Nations." Each set of stamps, when cut apart and assembled properly, will make complete stamps. The public is invited to put the stamps together and name the countries they represent. The Chicago Tribune will pay $10,000.00 in Cash Prizes for the best answers! See Prize List at right.
2. The composite stamps must be cut out, assembled and pasted or pinned together. Below each stamp must be written the name of the country it represents. A total of 42 stamps will be printed—3 each Sunday for 14 Sundays. IMPORTANT! Hold all stamps until you have the complete set of 42. Then send them to "Stamps," Chicago Tribune, Post Office Box 1539, Chicago, Illinois.
3. This contest is open to everyone—men, women, boys and girls—except employes of the Chicago Tribune and their families. It does not matter where you live.
4. You pay nothing. Just prove your skill.
5. All stamps must be in by midnight 21 days after Set No 14 is published. Each entry should be sent by First Class Mail, Postage Prepaid. Entries with insufficient postage will be returned by the Post Office Department. A letter must be sent with your entry giving your name and address and telling the name of your favorite Stamp and why you like it best. Letters must not exceed 50 words.

   Contestants may send as many sets as they wish, but no contestant will be entitled to more than one prize. No entries will be returned.
6. The judging will be based upon the accuracy of putting the stamps together, correctly naming the countries they represent, neatness, and merit of the accompanying letter. Elaborate entries will receive no greater consideration than the most simple entries. The prime requirement will be accuracy. Therefore any school boy or girl has the same chance to obtain a prize as any man or woman.
7. SCHOOL TEACHERS, NOTE: To interest School Teachers in encouraging their pupils to enter this instructive and educational game, the Chicago Tribune will award 5 prizes of $100.00 each to the teachers of public, parochial or private schools of grammar or high school grades, whose pupils rank highest among the winners. Teachers! This new game will familiarize your pupils with many foreign countries. Help them win!
8. You need not purchase the Chicago Tribune to compete. You may copy or trace the stamps from the Tribune and assemble the stamps from the copies you have made. The Tribune may be examined at any of its Offices or at Public Libraries free of charge.
9. The judges will be a committee appointed by the Chicago Tribune. Entrants agree to accept their decision as final. In case of ties a duplicate award will be given each tying contestant.

Study of Child at the Piano by Anton Bruehl

PERCY GRAINGER says: "There are certainly no pianos in the world that can begin to compare with the Steinway."

LET THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS BE A BACKGROUND

FOR YOUR children

YOU AND YOUR CHILDREN MAY BEGIN TO ENJOY THE STEINWAY NOW... IN YOUR HOME... BY MAKING AN ORIGINAL DEPOSIT OF ONLY 10% WITH LYON & HEALY

A NATURAL attractiveness seems to lie in the person who is accomplished in any of the fine arts. And instruction on the Steinway has proved an ideal way to acquire this.

For the music lover, the Steinway is a ready companion that will respond to his moods and his taste with all the tonal magic for which the Steinway has so long been famous. And the Instrument of the Immortals, besides being the ideal instrument for the children's instruction, and the instrument that adapts itself most colorfully to a gay evening's entertainment, adds the final cultured touch to the beauty of your home.

The long-lived Steinway is the finest piano in the world. Visit Lyon & Healy tomorrow and be convinced. Inspect and listen to the instrument that would fit most appropriately into your home. And do it with assurance that the Steinway is quite within your means. . . . For there is a Lyon & Healy plan whereby this chosen instrument of nearly every noted artist from Wagner to Rachmaninoff may be purchased by even the modest income.

A new Steinway Upright piano can be bought for a total as low as $875

10% down balance in three years

This means that the Steinway Upright may be obtained with a cash deposit of only $87.50. Payment of the balance is made in small monthly instalments over a three-year period. Any Steinway may be purchased on the plan of 10% down, balance in three years. Used pianos accepted in partial exchange.

THE STEINWAY BABY GRAND — A Steinway of this size and power... at $1425... is an extraordinary value. It may be obtained with a down payment of only $142.50. Payment of balance is made in small monthly instalments over a three-year period. It is the ideal instrument for the majority of homes. Its beautiful finish harmonizes with any plan of interior decoration. Its size is such as to conserve floor space, and still retain that beauty and breadth of tone which a true grand piano ought to have. There are many Steinway sizes and prices (including period models). Also with the famous Duo-Art reproducing action.

A FORETASTE OF THE JOYS OF CHRISTMAS—How many noses of awed little fellows have been pressed against the show windows of Chicago stores since the glittering wonders of Christmas were first unrolled there? We don't know, of course. But here are three, belonging to owners busily engaged in preparation of a list to send to Santa. (Underwood & Underwood photo.)

ONE OF THE SPANGLED WINDOWS AGAINST WHICH THE NOSES PRESS—Mostly little girls' noses, in this case; for this loop display of Christmas delights is principally dolls, of every station of life and size. (Photo by Godfrey Lundberg of The Tribune staff.)

TO SEE HOW THEY WILL FIT—Three young visitors try out the various methods of transportation offered by the toy wonderland of one of the loop's great department stores.

DREAMED that she awoke to see Santa Claus, all loaded down with wonderful presents for a good little girl, standing right beside her crib. And how we got the picture we can't imagine, but here it is!

WORKING FOR KRIS KRINGLE—A German maker of dolls works early and late helping to manufacture enough of them to go around for Christmas. For it is a well known fact, of course, that St. Nick has helpers in Germany, as well as everywhere else from the north pole to the south. (Pacific and Atlantic photo.)

DINNER FOR THE REINDEER—Brian McFadden offers a tasty morsel of reindeer moss, along with an invitation to stop on his roof. Nowadays Santa Claus gets around most of the way by plane, but still there are places where the reindeer come in handy. (Pacific and Atlantic photo.)

HIS MOST RECENT PORTRAIT—This is considered a very fine likeness of good St. Nick by those who have seen him during the last few weeks, though indeed there are some who say it doesn't half do him justice. (Pacific and Atlantic photo.)

ONE OF ST. NICK'S AMERICAN HELPERS—Zadoc Reynolds—he's 83—has been putting cunning workmanship into the cleverest of toys the last few weeks at a home for aged men at Philadelphia, always with a big and hopeful audience. (Underwood & Underwood photo.)

A MATTER OF TASTE—Does daughter want a new kind of doll this winter? Big or little, flaxen curls or brunette, Dutch maiden or marionette? One decides what it might be, one goes to the stores, and—there it is! (Underwood & Underwood photo.)

Fresh Sea Food Offers Delicious Menu Variation

Raw Oysters Choice of Epicure.

By Meta Given.

ONE owes it to society to eat joyfully of all kinds of wholesome foods. I mean foods that are compatible with one's digestion and metabolism. And not only is it a social obligation but it is also a physical duty to include a great variety of foods in one's diet. No better way has been found to maintain a good state of nutrition.

There are some people who seem to feel that a strong food dislike is a measure of an enviable ability to discriminate. In reality a dislike is more of an indication of narrow experience and lack of adaptability. Usually the food that is disliked is one with which the individual is not familiar. As he becomes accustomed to the new flavor the dislike usually decreases rapidly.

In inland cities like our own, there are thousands who have not until recently had a chance to become familiar with a great variety of sea foods, especially the mollusks, oysters and scallops, and the crustaceans, lobsters and shrimps. Modern transportation and modern methods of distribution, however, are now supplying our markets with the freshest of products at reasonable prices. Families with moderate means can now make consistent use of these valuable foods.

Contain Iodine.

Oysters, clams and lobsters contain more iodine than other marine food. They contain 200 times as much iodine as milk, eggs or beefsteak. By using such products in the diet several times each week the amount of iodine ingested can be increased considerably, which should be of special interest to persons planning the diet of young people living in districts where disorders of the thyroid gland are common. Oysters especially are remarkable among ordinary food substances in their high proportion of glycogen, a substance resembling starch but more readily and easily assimilated.

Sea food is worth eating even if we never become confirmed supporters of it. And a good slogan is: Learn to eat it with enjoyment if you can and if you can't, eat it anyhow. And this reminds me of a story. One winter I lived with a family who owned a small town drug store. The members of that household almost lived at the store. One day I went home to the big empty house a little early. As I opened the door I heard peculiar noises issuing from the kitchen. Thinking that some thief had broken in I boldly grasped an umbrella and marched kitchenward. There was the head of the family eating oysters. His greeting was, "I'm getting in trim for the annual druggists' banquet. I have to practice eating oysters every year because they always have them on the menu. And I do want to be able to sit up and keep a pleasant countenance as I eat them."

There are few people who fail to enjoy raw oysters after eating them a few times. And the easiest way for most people to acquire a taste for them is first to eat them cooked; then go to the raw.

Eat Oysters Raw.

The eating of oysters raw is as correct from a dietetic as from an epicurean point of view. The delicate flavor of the raw oyster is best when undisguised. Those people who "just love oysters" and then deluge them in horseradish, lemon juice, etc., are just kidding themselves and trying to fool the rest of the world. They might just as well come right square up to the confessional and admit that they don't like oysters. These same people object to raw oysters because they think they are unhygienic.

The United States and municipal governments are supervising and inspecting sources of production and there is as sufficient guarantee of their wholesomeness as there is of strawberries, lettuce, celery, and other food not usually cooked for consumption. If the oysters are cooked there is a double guarantee. Raw oysters contain an abundance of vitamin C and are more easily digested than cooked ones. Cooking toughens the protein.

Traditionally oysters are tabooed during the months of May, June, July and August. A popular saying used to be "Eat oysters only in the "R" months." This idea was held originally because the oyster is not desirable during the spawning season. However, the spawning time differs in localities and no elimination of certain fixed months can insure protection against use in that condition. The rule is of traditional value only. It was first recorded by a Dr. Butler of England in 1599, but his time outlived statement is of no real worth.

Many Sizes and Varieties.

Many sizes and varieties of oysters are sold on the market. Price usually varies with the size, increasing as the oysters become larger. Such names as the consumer learns to associate with oysters are misused. The name Blue Point" is a name incorrectly applied to small oysters. In reality it is the name of a locality rich in oyster beds. "Rockaway," "Saddle Rock," "Cut," etc., are similarly employed for larger sizes. "Lynnhaven" is tagged onto the largest size oysters. As a matter of fact, there are both large and small oysters of all varieties. The difference is principally in the age. The trade sizes are "half shell," the smallest sized oysters, usually eaten raw; "culls," medium sized oysters, eaten raw or stewed, etc., and "box," the largest, generally used for frying.

The true oyster lover rebels at the thought of always consigning the largest oysters to the frying pan. He objects to serving them on the half shell, for age makes no difference in the tenderness of the oyster. Deep seated custom only is responsible for their being consumed raw while young and small. If permitted to grow large, the flesh is just as choice. The maximum size for oysters is a little more than ten inches.

Oysters are to be eaten on the half shell they should be opened just

CHARMING FROCKS FOR THE CHRISTMAS SEASON

Patou has made the tunic blouse of this ensemble festive by beading it with crystal. The skirt is white satin and the white satin coat is trimmed with sable. Sketched first.

Norman Hartnell's hostess frock of American beauty red chiffon, shown second, is trimmed with tiny hand made tucks and circular ruffles.

Maggy Rouff combines this brown velvet tailleur with a blue satin blouse, and adds brown caracul puffs to the sleeves. The Reboux hat is made of brown velvet. Sketched third.

Last, the blouse-jacket of this black satin Schiaparelli dress closes under crossed and twisted bands of white satin. It comes off to show an Empire evening gown.

Paris Puts Lots of Loveliness in 'Home Styles'

Empire Line Favored by Designers.

Paris Snapshots

The first spring hats are out in Paris, and they are made of a new straw that is fashioned from paper and looks like panama. The French milliners claim that it will wear like iron in spite of its feather like lightness.

Agnes' newest hats have rolls of felt or twisted velvet, like miniature rubber tires, placed around the head like a halo. They're really most flattering.

Hats for Palm Beach are being made in Paris of pastel colored linen. They have seven inch brims with notched or scalloped border and shallow rounded crowns.

Something new in costume neck laces is Schiaparelli's braided neck lace made of tubes of horsehair braid in white or colors.

The newest of glove colors is old gold, stitched with brown or black, and Alexandrine has handkerchiefs and flowers to match them.

By Bettina Bedwell.

PARIS.—[Special.]—Thanksgiving over, holiday fashions, hot off the griddle of Paris inspiration, are ready to be served to women, girls and subdebs. Before you begin on that Christmas list, it's a good idea to go into close communion with your clothes closet, and prepare to disseminate Christmas cheer via your clothes line. This can be done by making old clothes new, or by an advance present of a new dress. It's downright noble to look your best during the holidays—pleases everybody who sees you, and helps along your own holiday morale.

These styles, as Paris sees them, are home styles. They're distinctly different from the more public fashions for street and evenings out. They can be worn outside of the home, that is some of them can, but they are designed specially to shine around the home fireside, steam radiator, or what have you? In short, holiday fashions look their best in the intimate atmosphere of the house, though they're not at all in the line of house dresses or frivolous negligées. They are a combination of hostess frock, Sunday night dresses and party clothes, and most useful to have around your house after the holidays, also.

Equipped with Jackets.

This season a good many of the new holiday dresses to wear in the house are equipped with inside coats, jackets, etc. These subwraps are extremely useful in France where a temperature of sixty degrees is unusual for the house, and they're mighty convenient, also, to vary the effect of the frock with which they are worn, fend off drafts and adapt the dress to outside service. The inside wrap has, I believe, become a fixture of style, and is here to stay for a long, long time. It is particularly interesting to the woman who must make one ensemble do the work of several.

Home styles for holiday consumption, while they have such practical features as the little indoor jacket, have abandoned the inhibitions that our usual costumes must respect. Holiday frocks are holiday, and much of their charm is due to some extravagance of line, color, cut, or material. The quaintness of basques and empire waistlines is entirely suitable to home clothes of festive persuasion, and leg o' mutton sleeves and shoulder puffs also belong to this phase of fashion, where there is no danger of their appearing eccentric or exaggerated.

You may look like a picture in your own home without fear of criticism, and at the same time you will be approved by Paris. Trailing skirts that have been tried and found wanting for outside occasions, by the smart Parisienne, are both chic and charming in the frock for holiday functions at home. Embroidered frocks and tunics, too, are particularly effective under the shaded lights chez soi.

Colors that only a free, or extravagant female would dare to give a debut in the public eye, seem right and are right for the holiday home frock. The new golden yellow, American beauty red, Irish green, and such shades are used frequently by Paris dressmakers for home party frocks. White is gorgeous for those who do not have to worry about cleaner's bills on the first of January. Even for the holiday dress that must be worn a long time afterward, do not choose a dull, neutral color. If you simply must be careful, select black and white and in a material with some luster to it, or brown with some pickup shade such as pink or turquoise in the way of belt and scarf or other details. You might do the same thing with navy blue or gray. Gray with American beauty is simply ravishing, and so smart this winter for party clothes, both evening and afternoon.

Empire Line Good.

Women who want to choose a holiday frock with a weather eye on spring modes may consider with confidence the now daringly different empire line which is being forecast for spring. This line is shown in its most wearable version in the Schiaparelli model in a sketch on this page. Schiaparelli makes this inside ensemble in two pieces: dress and draped jacket, so that it's appropriate for lots of occasions of the Sunday night variety, theater and dinners. It is a perfect holiday dress for the girl or woman who can't afford to be too extravagant in her fashions.

The dress alone is shown in the standing figure and the dress with jacket is shown in the seated figure. Both are made of lustrous, heavy black satin, trimmed with equally lustrous white satin. The dress has a simple bodice ending at the normal waistline and an inside length skirt flared at the front by inverted box

It's the Spirit of Giving That Counts; Tell It to the Children

By Gladys Huntington Bevans.

"WHO gives himself with his alms feeds three—Himself, his hungry neighbor, and Me."

Those two simple and beautiful lines from The Vision of Sir Launfal come into my mind today with the thought of the Christmas that lies not so very far ahead.

When you begin to talk about Christmas don't you find it a terrible drain on your supply of adjectives? Christmas is a gay time, a lovely time—a time of sparkle and lights and green and red—of laughter and singing and giving and receiving and feasting. And for those of us who have children Christmas is a time of great spiritual opportunity.

That spiritual opportunity lies in two things. First, in the significance of the Story of the Christ Child, which besides its spirituality is so rich in other ways. There is in it, besides the actual story, the picturesqueness of the old paintings of the Nativity and the intimate charm of songs and carols. Incidentally, this story of the Christ Child, Joseph, Mary, the shepherds, and the Wise Men with their gifts is one that lends itself to dramatisation by the children most beautifully.

Manner Counts.

The second way in which Christmas provides great spiritual opportunity lies in the manner in which the children's gift-giving is done. And there is where the two lines from Sir Launfal have their application. It is how they give that matters with children. It is how they give that provides the spiritual opportunity—not what they give.

And right here is one of those cases where example is a powerful factor in influencing the children.

"Bill and Jane sent us such a big present last year," a wife may say to her husband, "that I was ashamed of that little cigaret set we gave them. This Christmas we'll have to spread ourselves."

Or a mother may say in the children's hearing: "I was going to stop giving presents to the Watson children, but how can I when they keep up their end?" Or, "O, I suppose I'll have to send something to that gossipy old Mrs. Black and Miss Simpson—though I begrudge the money."

We will have to admit that a great deal of Christmas giving is done in just that spirit. Some of that empty giving we could free ourselves of if we would. We don't have to do so much perfunctory giving, so much of the "I've got to give her a present because she gives me one" sort of thing.

Do Nice Things Openly.

But if we do it and the children know it, it certainly is a bad example. There's not much spirit of Christmas about it. There's no giving of ourselves at all. And certainly if a child hears and sees that kind of motive animate present-giving among the adults in his family, he's not going to get much spiritually out of Christmas giving. If you have to do some of that kind of thing, at least try to keep the children from knowing it.

But the other part of your giving do let them hear about. If Christmas means to you a chance to pause in the rush of existence and show your love by giving to your dear ones something that you know they want—if you deny yourself to do it—if you think and plan—or if you make the gift with your own hands let the children know all about it. Do such nice things openly.

If from their babyhood your children have seen such evidence of giving yourself with your gift, they will become imbued with the very spirit of Christmas giving, and will need only a little guidance from you.

But some coöperation they will need—both where they're little and when they are big. This help may take the form of matching your enthusiasm with theirs in the choice of a present—of encouraging them—of keeping secrets with them—of time spent in shopping trips—of making opportunities for them to earn Christmas money and of perhaps starting an allowance.

In fact this last matter—the one of saving money for Christmas gifts is one of the things which helps to crystalize the spirit of Christmas to them. Not just because it's money. But because, child or man, if you've denied yourself or worked to accumulate a little hoard, something of yourself has gone into it. And that is the big thing.

Not at all like having a father or a mother say, "Here's two dollars [or one or five] to buy presents with." The small bank or special purse that is filled gradually over a period of weeks will yield much more worth than a pile of coins when it's emptied—though that thing is so intangible that it doesn't even clink!

A Chance to Save.

So give your children a chance to save for the presents they will give. Then let them start their planning and their working far ahead of time. In leisurely labor, whatever it may be, there is a real pleasure that seldom comes with a piece of manual labor through at the last minute. Try, too, not to leave the shopping trips until the last crowded days.

Even if they can't make many of their gifts, encourage them to make some. A child is learning something in life when he learns that one can be generous with other things than money. One can be generous with time and labor as well as with material things.

Christmas is a time of beauty in so many ways. It is the gay, pure, sparkling, beautiful holiday gem of the year. Turn it over, look at it from all angles, and let your child find in it all the beauty of gayety and color and generosity and warmth and spirituality that it holds.

Which last word spirituality brings us back to:

The child who saves and thinks, or plans and makes a gift for some one he loves gives not just his present—he gives himself. And that is Christmas.

CHIN CHIN

By Kathleen McLaughlin

CHINAMEN, chopsticks, and chow mein! No, we didn't have any of 'em in mind in our fourth attempt at tilting these paragraphs to our mutual satisfaction. That eminent lexicographer, Dr. Noah Webster, defined the verb chin as "to chatter," and, since that's the aim and object herein, the above is respectfully submitted. If you fancy it, write now—or forever hold your peace, because it probably will be displaced next Sunday unless the public clamor wins it a stay of execution.

Albert Fuller of the Palmer house, whose hair-stiffening radio murder mystery, "Remote Control," had gratifying runs both on the stage and in films, has completed the first draft of his second theatrical effort. This time he's co-author of a comedy.

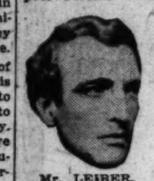
Fritz Leiber, declaiming the "Alas, poor Yorick!" scene from "Hamlet" to a packed house and considerable applause a few nights back, startled more than one in his audience when he got off that immortal couplet:



Mr. LEIBER.

"Imperious Cæsar, dead and turned to clay,
Might stop a hole to keep the wind away."

In the Leiber version, wind is made to rhyme with blind. Well—maybe we're wrong.

Another Latin beauty, highly talented but nonprofessional, is Senora Milla Domingues, wife of the Mexican vice consul, Adolfo D. Dominguez. Her admirers declare that the senora has a heavenly voice and that she puts the soul of Mexico into them when she sings the songs of her native country. She came to Chicago from Mexico city, and is as lovely to see as to listen to, they say.

Echo of the Army-Notre Dame game: One masculine spectator, who had indulged in too much firewater with a view to keeping warm in spite of the weather, peered with glazed eyes into the stands behind him. Then he confided to a companion that practically everybody present seemed to be Scotch, and, when the reason for that was demanded, replied that they all kept yelling: "Get that quarter back! Get that quarter back!"

In reminiscent mood, Mary Irwin tells of interviewing Nellie Fernandez, a few years ago, when that Spanish beauty was headed for Broadway after taking the west coast by storm. Somehow, she never arrived on the great white way. On being asked what most impressed her in America, she chattered lengthily in Spanish, after which the interpreter laconically explained: "Americans' punctuality."

"Is there much difference between Spanish and American punctuality?" was the next query. Another long, voluble speech by the actress, which the interpreter summed up in the phrase: "About two hours."

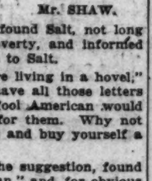
Alexander Greene, who sells books what time he isn't trekking off to odd corners of the globe, came back from England recently with a true story about George Bernard Shaw. He had occasion to call on Henry Salt, who, in addition to having written a life of Thoreau, is an old friend of G. B. S., with whom he had corresponded for years.



Mr. SHAW.

A mutual friend found Salt, not long ago, living in poverty, and informed Shaw, who wrote to Salt.

"I'm told you're living in a hovel," he said. "You have all those letters of mine. Some fool American would pay a big price for them. Why not put them on sale and buy yourself a house?"

Salt acted on the suggestion, found the "fool American," and, for obvious reasons, calls the snug home he purchased in Brighton "The Shaw."

Just the other day Ray Spellman breezed in from Alabama to visit the folks in Lake Forest and to celebrate his return decided to go dancing on Saturday night. He parked the family sedan outside the Drake, but discovered he'd left the keys at home. Returning there in the small hours, he found no car. Great grief! Four nights thereafter a friend of the family went to a party in Lake Forest and heard the news.

"Saturday night?" she puzzled. "Why, I recognized it down in front of the Drake Sunday afternoon." A telephone call confirmed her story. The car, returned by the borrowers, was patiently waiting there to be collected. The funny part of it is that Ray's dad sells insurance, but didn't have a penny of it on his own vehicle.

By request: A season or so ago, when Mary Garden was indisposed, and a rumor got around the opera house, thence to the city desks of the newspapers, that she had quarreled with Giorgio Polacco and had quit the opera, Geno Forbes Herrick, sent by THE TRIBUNE to see the diva about the story, found her ill in bed. On being questioned as to whether or not she had quarreled with the maestro, Miss Garden haughtily replied: "Certainly not! Polacco quarrels only with mediocre people."

Beauty in Six Weeks? Here Are Some Exercises That Will Help

By Antoinette Donnelly.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Before you decide that you'll dash over to Vienna, or Paris, or Carlsbad, or any other "hide-out" spot for rejuvenation work, I want you to try something—two somethings—for six weeks. At the end of the six weeks, if you're good and do what you're told every day, Sundays included, you can run down to the diamond merchant and buy yourself a slave bracelet with the money you have saved by your home treatments. Or you can buy yourself a pretty little gilt-edged bond or two.

If you're among the large army that never did contemplate running off on a steamship to a furrin' port to have your face remodeled and your figure done over, listen in on our home rejuvenation instructions just the same. They're simply swell for what ails you, from a plump midrib to a wattled chin, neither of which handicaps do I suspect my faithful readers of being troubled with.

What I am going to tell you to do is going to be about the easiest way of grabbing off a great big slice of beauty yet discovered. It has sense to it. You don't have to be off your job for a minute, and I promise you you'll do your job more efficiently and in a better spirit than you've experienced in a long time.

Must Be Done Daily.

Stretching and breathing are the duties you are going to be asked to perform daily. Stretching exercises and breathing exercises.

Women are running downtown doling out large and portly sums of their own or some one's else hard earned cash for circulatory treatments guaranteed to rejuvenate. And if the aforesaid women can stir up circulation only under pressure of large and handsome fees, more power to the rejuvenation parlors that lure them in; but you don't have to spend great gobs of money to get back the old girlish silhouette, gait, and laughter.

In a daily article quite recently I called attention to the stretching exercises and how they are being advocated by experts. Especially for women who have lost that first flush of enthusiasm for such muscular energy as tennis involves, the stretching movements are endorsed. For women who can't abide courses of exercising with many movements to remember and a certain unavoidable monotony attached to their doing, the stretching exercises answer their prayer for a lean silhouette at small cost.

Now, if you will swear by all that's sacred that for six weeks you'll stretch the first thing in the a. m., and do a good breathing turn in a well ventilated room, I'll guarantee you a better feeling than you've had for a long time.

Stretch Thoroughly.

It doesn't matter so much how you stretch, but it is necessary that you stretch from head to foot. Stretch the arms, the legs, the waist muscles, the hips—every muscle in the body. Put yourself up full length, down full length and over and over again. If the bed is long enough to permit your arms to go overhead and the baseboard doesn't stop your feet in their down progress, do the exercises in bed. If not, do them on the floor, stretching like everything.

You can shave a couples of inches off your waistline and hips in no time pulling on the muscles, as suggested. You won't believe it until you try it yourself. If the floor doesn't appeal to you as a bed of roses, there's still a chance for good stretching standing right up on your pretty pink toes with hands stretched high overhead. Pull higher and higher on the hands, coming up on the tips of the toes. Feel the pull in the arms, under them, through the waist and in the legs.

Stand close to the wall and stretch to reach a mark thereon, the mark placed just a bit out of reach each time. If that doesn't give you a circulatory treatment, nothing will. But what it does for you is to reëstablish the "elastic" quality to your muscles that you used to have years ago as a young thing, pliant, alert and light moving. It makes an incredible difference in your walk when you introduce that muscle pliancy. I could give you formal stretching exercises but I don't think you need them. If you get the idea in your head that you've got to stretch high, long and elastic-rubberlike you have the idea.

Breathing Program.

Now, add to this muscle limbering gesture a simple breathing program and you do beautiful things to your complexion, your lungs, and whether you believe it or not, to the curved bust outline without which a figure nowadays is nothing. You now, of course, without being reminded, what letting in some deep draughts of air does for the stuffy mind, the indecisive mind. Stand before your window or in your well ventilated room mornings and drink in the gay elixir in copious draughts. Twenty drinks are not too much to imbibe.

Rejuvenation Treatment.

When you are outdoors—and the six weeks' program calls for at least one half hour of sprinting along—you must breathe through the nostrils. At the same time you must remember about the stretching. Walk "taller." Walk up on your toes, stretch the neck up, the chest out. When you can get the breathing and the stretched figure coöperating smoothly you can be sure you are going to be nothing less than a grand 1930 model of vitally young person — clear eyed, clear complexioned, and clear minded.

Do put yourself on a six weeks' stretch now, please, and give the rejuvenation treatment an honest-to-goodness trial. You won't stop at the end of the six weeks' trial, I know. We don't want you to. But six weeks will give you a fair idea of what muscle and lung condition contributes to that for which we femmes are so eagerly searching—the secret of youth.

Stretch up tall a dozen times throughout the day just to keep yourself from slumping, mentally or physically. Every time you do it you pull in your abdomen muscles and flatten them, and you know what that alone does for the figure.

Fine Reproductions

Cupboards Have a Long and Honorable History, and a Fine Chair Has an Intrinsic Worth That Is Above Its Price Label.

THE court cupboard has played an important rôle in England ever since the days of the Tudors. It was in general use there from 1550 to 1660 and occupied a vital place in baronial hall and princely palace, for on its shelves splendid plate was exhibited and behind its doors was stored the food to be consumed by the nobles.

Court cupboards of the Tudor period were Gothic in character, with effigies and heads of royalty carved upon the panels of the doors. During Elizabeth's reign wood carvers specialized in grotesque figure work, intricate interlacing of strap work and ribbon ornamentation. In the Jacobean era the court cupboard became a most elaborate piece of furniture. The two tiered variety usually had an overhanging canopy, with the top tier smaller than the lower.

During the reign of Charles II. the cupboard became plainer and less beautiful, the only attractive feature being the urn shaped foot, and the only decorative feature the diamond ornament in the center of the panels.

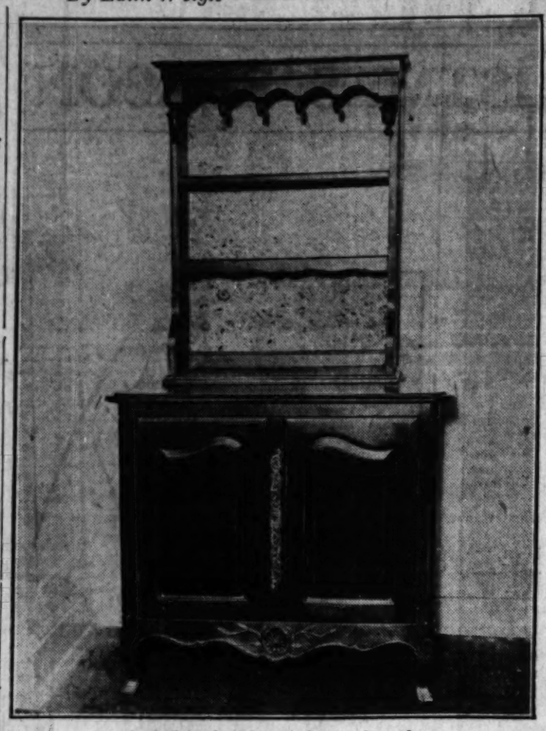
The cupboards we see today are a far cry from the elaborate ones mentioned and are mostly adaptations of the type used by our New England forefathers. They may be built into a room and so become an integral part of it, a la the Adam brothers, or they may be made separately and fitted into convenient corners. They are delightful adjuncts of the early American dining room, now so popular once more, and may be had in walnut or maple. Besides being a decided decorative feature, they are most practical in the small house or city apartment.

One corner cupboard I saw is 37 inches in width, 16 inches deep, and 80 inches high. It comes in white walnut and maple and is particularly beautiful with its rounded shell ornamentation and its curved lower panel and scalloped base. It is largely made by hand.

The picture shows a movable cupboard, or group of shelves. It may be placed on a chest of drawers, or on a separate cupboard, as illustrated. It is lined with quaintly patterned wall paper, which makes a nice background for old pewter or china. And if you grow tired of it, it is a simple matter to lift it off, hang it on the wall, and fill it with books, or put it away.

French Provincial in character, these shelves and cupboard would combine nicely with early American pieces. The wood is chestnut. Both these pieces and the corner cupboard may be had in Chicago.

The Duncan Phyfe side chair shown is one of a set of twelve in the collection of Charles Woolsey Lyon of New York City. These chairs came from an original set of eighteen made for Roger Ludlow, aide-de-camp to Gen. Washington. Five of the others from this group are in the Metropolitan museum in New York.



A shell cupboard in walnut and maple. The top of this cupboard may be removed.

The chairs rest on four gracefully curved legs carved in front with a finely modeled acanthus. The seats are light and rectangular, with fluted side rails. These rails curve delicately into the gentle curve of the back supports. The open backs have the characteristic lyre splat and are unusually delicate and graceful in line and proportions. The wood is fine mahogany.

While it is not possible to pick up rare jewels such as these unless one has much wealth and plenty of leisure for the hunt, it is interesting to know that excellent copies of valuable originals are being made and sold every day, and at conservative prices. Our Chicago department and furniture stores have any number of fine reproductions that are becoming increasingly popular as knowledge on the subject grows.

If you have a Duncan Phyfe table, a reproduction, and are interested in finding the best chairs possible to accompany it, cut out the photograph of Mr. Lyon's chair and use it as a model.

How to Hang Pictures

By WillElla de Campi

In Selecting Them It is Important to Consider Their Type, Their Placing and Their Relation to Wall Space,

BECAUSE they were so incompetently handled, pictures for a short time were discarded from the decorative scheme of things and we lived through a period of flat, barren walls. It was generally conceded that all good interior decorators had vetoed the use of pictures, and the result of this belief was sadly devastating.

Decorators, it is true, with years of study to their credit, and with a knowledge of what is good and bad in decoration, claim that it is better to have no pictures at all than to have a frightful conglomeration of ill assorted ones, poorly executed. This fact still holds good, of course. We are thankful for having escaped from the crowded, overhung walls which were in vogue a generation ago. But even in the matter of picture hanging there is such a thing as moderation. We need not do away with all pictures! A few good pictures, appropriate in size and subject, can add greatly to the interest and decorative effect of a room.

In making a selection, it is important, first of all, that the subject be appropriate to the room in which it is to be placed. Subjects which will continue to please and which will not become tiresome as time goes on are the best to choose, in any event. We must realize that some pictures, though beautiful in themselves, are only appropriate for art gallery exhibitions, and are in no way suitable to the average room.

There are certain types of pictures which are especially fitting for decoration in living rooms, dining rooms, entrance halls and sun rooms. In this group may be included scenic and architectural paintings; portraits and interior scenes like those done by the old Dutch masters; floral paintings, marines, Japanese prints with their graceful tracery and fine coloring; and etchings of subjects which are of general interest.

Pictures in this class, as a rule, are quite expensive, but there are excellent reproductions today which are most moderately priced, and good reproductions really are preferable to poor originals. Most photographs, religious pictures, or those which are of special interest to any one person should be hung in bedrooms where the personal interest may be rightfully indulged.

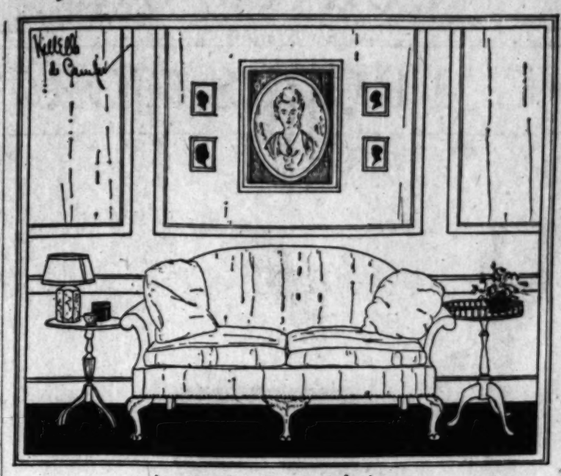
Next in importance to the selection of the pictures themselves comes the problem of placing and hanging them. Even the best picture, if badly placed, loses a great deal of its value. Certain principles of common sense and good balance must be observed. To begin with, the correct height for hanging a picture should be determined by the line of sight, or eye level of an average person standing in the center of the room. The center of the picture should be at the eye level, and pictures of different sizes should be hung so that the center of each one is on the same line, as shown in Figure 1. An exception to this rule is illustrated in Figure 2. Where one large picture is flanked by two or more pictures, the center line of the group as a whole should be at eye level.

In order to retain a sense of good balance there must be a relation of proportion between wall space and picture. A large picture is sure to look out of place and disquieting both to the eye, and subconsciously to the spirit, if hung in a narrow wall space. By the same token, a tiny picture, hung by itself in a wide space, will become sadly inconspicuous. Groups of small pictures, on the other hand, may be pleasingly arranged in spaces which would be too large for a single small one.

On the wide wall space over a sofa, desk, table, buffet or other large piece of furniture, a large picture may be placed to advantage. Then, if space permits, a number of small pictures of related subjects may be arranged at each side of the large one, as shown in the accompanying illustration. A charming portrait of a lady of the Georgian period is hung in the center of the wall space above a comfortable sofa. It is framed in dull gold. Two silhouettes of the same period, also in dull gold frames, are hung at each side of the portrait, making a dignified and harmonious group altogether.

In making a group formation, it is of great importance that the pictures be of related subjects. It is a mistake to detract from the value of a really fine picture by surrounding it with a conglomeration of ill assorted and poorly executed subjects. It is better to have too few than too many pictures. Simplicity and a feeling of repose are infinitely perferable to gaudy display.

Not to be passed over lightly are the methods employed for hanging pictures. Improper hanging can ruin an otherwise charming effect. Invisible means should be used wherever practicable, since the mechanism of hanging, if exposed, is liable to distract attention from the picture itself. Colored silk cords, tassels, rosettes, with their meaningless fussiness, are not really in good taste. Pictures which are too heavy to be hung from bracket nails in the walls must, of course, be hung from the moulding. They should be hung, then, by two separate wires in order to avoid the incongruous inverted V which is forced by the use of one continuous wire. Wire should be of the thinest quality which will bear the weight of the picture, and picture hooks should be painted to match the moulding so they will be as inconspicuous as possible.



An attractive grouping of pictures.

Paris Puts Lots of Loveliness in "Home Styles" This Season

plaits. There is a band of white satin at the rounded décolleté.

The jacket is long sleeved, and tied around the waist by means of a white satin twisted sash that is in one piece with the revers and collar. When worn it makes a daytime costume; left off, the dress is for evennig.

One of the most beautiful and smartest party dresses for holiday wear that Paris has to offer is the Jean Patou frock shown in another sketch. This dress has Patou's new tunic that is surpliced, belted and flared by gathers below the waistline. This tunic is made of white georgette beaded solidly on the lower sleeves, lower blouse, and tunic skirt, the beading running up in icicle points. The collar is also beaded.

The skirt of this dress is made of white satin cut circular and with an uneven hemline, longer in front and back than at the sides. Patou has designed the short sleeved, inside coat of white satin, shown in the background, to wear with this dress. It is bordered with sable.

Something Formal.

For the holiday hostess who needs something rather formal for her party, Norman Hartnell has designed the red chiffon frock shown today. He calls it Red Robin, and trims it with miles and miles of tiny hand run tucks that are swirled around the body of the dress, and that help to give this model its beautiful Venus line. The circular ruffle sleeves and the tucked shoulder caps keep this frock from being real evening. The narrow circular ruffles that droop toward the back of the skirt and become a trailing panel do their bit toward making the line of this frock so stunning.

The brown velvet suit shown in our third sketch is a Maggy Rouff model and with the blue satin blouse makes an ideal ensemble for holiday visits. The jacket of this is fitted in at the waistline and the hipline is made snug by being buttoned tightly at the left side. The puffs on the lower sleeves are brown caracul.

The skirt of this suit is flared by gores. The blouse of turquoise blue satin has two long jabot ends from the soft, tied collar, these ends being trimmed with points of satin. The unusual hat of brown velvet, flaring piratewise above a bandeau of turquoise velvet, is from Reboux.

The models shown here offer ideas for rejuvenating fading evening frocks for holiday wear by the addition of a blouse jacket, a tunic, or for making your winter suit appropriately holiday by treating it to a new blouse in some soft party color.

Closes Purse and Opens Eyes.

I have a neighbor woman who is an excellent cook, but she never bought a cook book in her life nor has she ever owned one.

She clips out every recipe she finds in newspapers or magazines and files them carefully in an index file, which she keeps for that purpose. Whenever she wants to cook a certain thing she always has plenty of recipes under that particular file to choose from.

It just goes to show what one can save by keeping the pocketbook closed and the eyes open. H. G.

Duchess Pudding.

Fill a dish three parts full with white bread crumbs. Beat two egg yolks with enough milk to cover the crumbs. Add two tablespoons of sugar. Bake until brown, let cool, cover the top with preserves. Beat up the whites of eggs, put on top and put in oven until brown. This is delicious eaten hot or cold. MRS. K.

Oatmeal Rocks.

One cup of sugar.
One cup of melted fat.
Three eggs.
Three-quarters of a teaspoon of salt.
One teaspoon of soda.
Two and one-quarters cups of uncooked oatmeal.
Two and one-quarter cups of flour.
One and one-half cups of seedless raisins.
Three-quarters of a cup of chopped nut meats.

Mix sugar with fat, then add eggs, salt, soda, oatmeal, flour, raisins, and nuts. Mix well and drop about one teaspoon to a rock on a well greased pan. Bake about ten minutes in a moderate oven. These are a favorite with children. D. S.

Radio Auction Bridge

Milton C. Work's second radio bridge game of the season, broadcast last Tuesday from W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, brought together as exhibition players Mrs. Wistar Morris Chubb of South Orange, N. J.; Mrs. John Munce Jr. of Alexandria, Va.; Christian A. Herter of Boston, and Sidney S. Lenz of New York.

Mr. Lenz, as dealer, south, opened the auction with one heart on: Spades, 3, 6, 5; hearts, K., Q., J., 10, 6; diamonds, K., J., 9, 7, and clubs, Q. Mrs. Chubb, west, said one spade on: Spades, K., J., 9, 4, 3; hearts, A., 3, 7, 4; diamonds, A., Q., 10, and clubs, A. Her spade bid was much sounder than a double would have been, as south had bid hearts and her own strength was predominantly in spades. Mrs. Munce, north, went to two hearts on: Spades, A., Q.; hearts, 9, 5, 3, 2; diamonds, none, and clubs, K., J., 10, 8, 5, 4, 2. She had wonderful assistance for her partner's heart bid; four trumps; the ace-queen doubleton of the suit bid on her right, so it was probable that no tricks would be lost in that suit; a blank diamond suit, presumably assuring that no tricks would be lost in that suit, and a long, strong club suit. Mr. Herter, east, passed. His hand was practically worthless, containing only: Spades, 10, 7, 2.; hearts, none; diamonds, 8, 6, 5, 4, 2, 2, and clubs, 9, 7, 6, 3. Being blank in the adverse heart suit was not sufficient reason for raising his partner, who had made only a following bid.

Mrs. Chubb Goes On.

On the second round of bidding Mr. Lenz, south, passed; Mrs. Chubb, west, bid two spades. Four cards of the adversaries' suit being a feature of her strong hand, she was prepared to bid until she got the contract at spades or could double hearts safely. Mrs. Munce, north, went to three hearts, still refraining from bidding her clubs until she had told her partner how extremely strong her hand was for the heart bid. Mr. Herter, east, was tempted at this point to give a raise to his partner who had shown such spade strength, but he inferred from the vigorous north and south bidding that his partner had not many hearts for him to ruff. He was wrong in this natural inference, but right in passing.

Mr. Lenz, south, passed; Mrs. Chubb, west, went to three spades, hoping to get a free double of four hearts; Mrs. Munce, north, said four clubs; Mr. Herter, east, passed. Mr. Lenz, south, went to four hearts, as his partner fully expected he would; Mrs. Chubb, west, doubled, and all passed.

Mrs. Chubb, west, opened the play by leading the 4 of spades, not expecting to take any spade tricks in view of her partner's ominous silence, but because to lead any other suit would have been worse. Mrs. Munce, north, spread her hand for dummy and Mr. Lenz played from it the queen of spades. Mr. Herter, east, played the deuce, and Mr. Lenz, south, the 5.

Takes Out Reentry.

At trick two Mr. Lenz led dummy's deuce of clubs to establish that suit in dummy, since dummy lacked enough trumps to enable him to ruff all the losing cards he held in the closed hand. East played the trey, declarer the queen, and Mrs. Chubb, west, was forced to win with the ace. Mrs. Chubb then led the trey of spades, as she realized she must use every possible means to take entry cards from dummy, to keep declarer from running the clubs. Dummy won with the ace of spades; east played the 7, declarer the 6.

Declarer next led dummy's king of clubs; east played the 6; declarer discarded the 8 of spades; Mrs. Chubb ruffed with the 4 of hearts. Mrs. Chubb was then in trouble for a lead. She dared not lead diamonds away from her double tenace with no diamonds in dummy. She was practically certain from the bidding that declarer held the king, while her own bidding must have shown him that she held the ace. She knew that if she led the queen or 10 of diamonds Mr. Lenz would win the trick in hos own hand, discarding from dummy; whereas if she led the ace she would simply surrender command of the suit and give dummy a ruff. There was a chance that Mr. Lenz had the 10 of spades, and if so a spade lead would force dummy's hand. All Mrs. Chubb needed to set the contract was one more ruff, as she already was sure of three tricks—the two she already had won and the ace of hearts.

Mr. Lenz Makes Contract.

Therefore, to trick five, Mrs. Chubb led the king of spades. Ordinarily, a declarer takes a ruff in dummy and a discard in closed hand whenever possible, but in this case it was more important for Mr. Lenz to keep trumps in dummy, so he discarded from dummy the 4 of clubs. East played the 10 of spades and declarer ruffed with the 10 of hearts, keeping his 6 spot as an entry to dummy.

Declarer then led the king of hearts, west played the 7, dummy the deuce, east the deuce of diamonds. Mr. Lenz continued with the queen of hearts, west won with the ace, dummy played the trey, and east the trey of diamonds. Mrs. Chubb was helpless; no lead she could make could prevent declarer from going game and contract. She led the 10 of diamonds, which Mr. Lenz won with dummy's 5 of hearts. Then leading dummy's 9 of hearts and underplaying with the 6 from his own hand, he drew the last adverse trump, and all of his clubs were good, giving him 64 trick points, 50 for making a doubled contract, and 80 honors for his four honors in one hand. At progressive or duplicate, there would be an additional 125 points for making game in one deal.

Commenting on the play, Mr. Work picked out as the high point of the hand Mr. Lenz' lead of the club from dummy and discard of a spade from his own hand at trick four. Had he led a heart or discarded a diamond, his contract would have failed. With the inevitable spade lead to the next trick, dummy would have been obliged to ruff, and, weakened to three trumps, further forcing would have prevented dummy's running of clubs.

The Contract Bidding.

At contract, the bidding would have been: South one heart; west, two spades; north, four hearts; west, after two intervening passes, double. North would be justified in the jump to four, because, with a spade bid on her right, the ace queen of spades can be counted as two assisting tricks or raisers. The four hearts coupled with a blank suit make one more raiser, the blank suit is valued as two more, and the king-jack-10 of clubs as another; a total of six, whereas only five raisers are required to jump partner from one to four.

Tuesday's Hands

The third of the season's bridge by radio games will be broadcast over station W-G-N next Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. Miss Rosamund Vahey of Boston will occupy the south position as dealer. Her partner will be William J. Wall of Ottawa, Canada, and they will be opposed by R. R. Richards of Detroit in the west and Mrs. William C. Ryan of San Antonio in the east. They will hold the following hands:

MR. WALL.

Buy an alarm clock with that $3 it saves

An alarm clock is merely one suggestion for spending that $3 you save by using Listerine Tooth Paste instead of tooth pastes in the 50¢ class.

When will you wake up to this fact?

25¢ is enough to pay for tooth paste

The day of the costly dentifrice is over. It is behind the times. At least 4,000,000 alert, critical men and women who used to pay 50¢ or more for their tooth paste now pay 25¢. That is the price of Listerine Tooth Paste. They have found that they sacrifice nothing in quality or results. They have found also that it saves them $3 a year.

If you are not already a user of this up-to-date dentifrice buy a large tube (25¢) today. Give it a thorough trial. It is made by the makers of Listerine, for fifty years students of mouth hygiene. You will find that in every way, it is worthy of the Listerine name.

See how perfectly and how gently it cleans teeth.

See how swiftly it erases ugly tartar and unpleasant discolorations.

Note how its modern cleansing agents reach hard-to-get-at spaces between teeth and remove decay-causing matter.

Note how white and unmarred it leaves the enamel. How it imparts brilliance and luster that others envy.

Look also for that wonderful feeling of mouth invigoration that follows its use.

That such a paste can be offered at such a price is due to three factors. Enormous buying power. Modern manufacturing methods. Mass production. Each cuts manufacturing costs, enabling us to offer you at 25¢ a tooth paste that would ordinarily cost twice that much. Lambert Pharmacal Co., St. Louis, Mo., U. S. A.

Presents for Men

By Helen Bartlett

Suggestions for Gifts for the Hunter, Fisherman, Golfer, Lover of Dogs, and for Him Who Just Sits and Reads.

FAR be it from us to boast, but we simply can't refrain from pointing out this morning that we are performing a noble service for the stronger sex. The poor dears who reap socks, shirts, ties, gloves, and smoking accessories, Christmas after Christmas, ought to give us a vote of thanks. We've been concentrating on their particular problem and if we do say it, as shouldn't, we've just about solved it.

We explored a large sporting goods store and therein found the answer to the anguished prayers of wives and girl friends for something different.

Like the men of small stature and little brawn who always crave to be bezars, we, who have practically no physical courage, have a strong craving for guns. We looked at these first. If there is a hunter in your home who needs a new gun, why not give him an order for one that he can pick out himself? The price range is extremely wide. For these same hunters there are duck, snipe, goose, and other decoys; game carriers, shell bags, gun cases, and those articles of clothing that keep him from freezing to death in the chilly dawn. There are also special sportsmen's socks, jackets, boots, sweaters, gloves, and caps, any one of which make good gifts for the man who goes in for hunting.

Also, here one can find everything in the way of fishing aids. There are vicious looking hooks, all kind of rods and reels, lines, flies, and tackle boxes.

For Sports Lovers.

For boys and men whose tastes run that way there are, too, all aids to joy on the baseball field. A boy would be thrilled to receive a catcher's mitt, a fielder's glove, a mask, a good bat, or some balls.

And then of course, there are the golfers, who are always with us. For the really handsome gift to them you can't go wrong on a set of clubs; for less expensive remembrances there are bags, tees, balls, and ball markers.

Then for those energetic fiends who think nothing of a set of tennis before dinner you can get a favorite racquet, a net, tennis shoes, balls, or court markers. Incidentally, a net and markers would be a slick idea for friends who live in the country.

Of course you've heard that archery is popular. Wouldn't a set be a good gift for a family of young people? At this store you can get bows and arrows, targets, quivers, arm guards, and bow string in a wide variety of prices and qualities.

Skates are a good standby at Christmas time. Few boys and girls would spurn them. There are ice skates with or without shoes, for skaters of all degrees of skill; hockeys, racers, and figure skates. For the children there are the screw clamp kind priced as low as $2.50. Roller skates are $4.75.

How About a Dog?

And now we come to a gift suggestion we've been meaning to promote for several weeks—a dog. So many people love them and so few have them. Can't you imagine what a hit a gift of one would make with a real dog lover? You can be terribly extravagant when you go to buy a dog, but there's really no need to be unless you want some particular kind that's expensive. It's absolutely necessary, though, to know the recipient's tastes. It would hardly do to give a Russian wolf hound to a man who wants a homely Airedale, would it?

What put us in mind of it this week was the truly complete dog department this store boasts. [There really aren't any dogs, but there is everything for dogs and we don't know how it might better be described.] There are special curved feeding bottles for tiny puppies, even feeding spoons in two sizes; brushes, bowls, pluckers, blankets, collars and harnesses. And, what won our heart completely, a dog grooming outfit—a neat kit that holds comb, wire brush, scissors, soaps, and even a bath towel. [There are special needs for special dogs; name the breed and get just what your friend needs.] It is exclusive with this store and costs only $12.50.

There is also a dog rack for the pet's sole use. On it you can neatly hang his leash, his collar or harness and his sweater. At the top of the rack you have a painted wire hair, scottie, sealyham, or cocker spaniel. It's only $2.50.

We had a grand time in this department with the very nice man who runs it and who knows ALL about dogs. And we think we served stern duty well, too; what better gift for those friends who own a dog than something specially for it?

Interesting Presents.

But getting back to the gift for men problem, here are other things we saw and liked: A lighter with a watch on it, of nickel or leather covered, $45.

Tobacco jars of Royal Doulton pottery decorated with hunt scenes, $8 each. There are ash trays to match at $2.

A household tool chest for the boy or man who likes to tinker with such things. It's amazingly complete and costs $10.

English seat canes, which are increasingly popular in this country, for golf matches, race meetings, etc., $10 to $25.

A hunting canteen of leather with a metal flask and sandwich box to strap on the rider's saddle, $15.

For boys, a four foot kit of red, white and blue cloth that may be taken apart when carried. With a ball of cord, $2. Also for boys, rodeo ropes $1, $1.50 and $2.

A collapsible drinking cup, with sun glass, mirror and compass, all in a neat little case, $1.75.

So much for the "different" things. We know, as well as Santa Claus, that the old reliables of socks and ties, shirts and studs will be bought and given, and next week we'll track down the best values and newest suggestions in dress accessories for men.

Needlework

A Dainty Pink Linen Handkerchief Case, Scented with Sachet, Makes a Desirable and Pleasant Remembrance.

HANDKERCHIEF cases make acceptable gifts, and may be made of satin, taffeta, moire silk, or crêpe de chine. Shapes and sizes also vary a great deal. Today a case is shown that is quite different, being made of a heavy quality of pink linen.

Pull threads to cut the linen by, cutting a piece 9 by 24 inches. Across one end lay a narrow hem. Fold this hemmed end over for a distance of 5½ inches—folding so that the hem is wrong side up. Seam down both sides, from the hem to the fold. You can readily see that this makes the pocket or case for the handkerchiefs.

On the part that folds over a shaped piece of white linen is stitched and before putting the white in place a small floral design is done in outline stitch—using pink, yellow, and green. When ready to put on the pink stitch in a narrow, wrong side seam to the pink, down one side and across the end. Then turn in a narrow seam's width, clipping at the corners, on the shaped edge, and stitch close to the edge.

Sew a piece of ribbon on the under side of the lapped piece at each end and on the upper side of the case to tie together.

This, of course, could be copied in any of the crêpes or silks and would be lovely. And if you like to experiment you can vary the shape of the trimming piece.

Radium silk is another material for these cases, and they are lovely when made of one of the delicate shades of blue, pink, yellow, or green, and covered with the sheerest handkerchief linen or organdy. Sixteen by eight inches makes a good size, and in this case a couple of thicknesses of sheet wadding is used in between the pieces of silk. Of course a plentiful amount of sachet powder is sprinkled in between the layers of cotton.

A strip of inch wide satin ribbon is laid through the center of the length of the case on the inside and caught where the case folds. A small lace medallion set in the linen or organdy near one of the corners and a narrow lace edge whipped around the edge of the case add to its beauty and attractiveness.

THE BIGGEST LIAR

Who was the biggest liar you ever knew, and what yarn did he tell? If you want to see him in print address Biggest Liar editor, Chicago Sunday Tribune.

Vivid Tale Teller.

He was a newcomer to our village many years ago, and on one Sunday afternoon shortly after his arrival, he thrilled a group of stay-at-homes by recounting his terrible experience while lost in the Rocky mountains.

It seemed that he had become separated from a camping party and spent three days and nights of awful torture from thirst. By the afternoon of the third day his tongue was so parched and swollen that it extended far out of his mouth, and he was fast losing consciousness.

By the time he had the rescuers stumbling over his prostrate form his hearers were right there suffering with him. It wasn't until some years later that we learned that he had never been out of southern Illinois in his life.

Mary Louise

By Eleanor Jewett.

Mary Louise had a beautiful dream,
Over the roofs and through the sky
She fled away in a pumpkin shell,
Behind a gander which winked his eye.

Mary Louise had a beautiful ride,
Under the clouds and over the moon;
And when she was hungry she nibbled a bit
Of the pumpkin inside with a silver spoon.

Mary Louise was surprised to find Herself in the morning back in bed.
"I don't think I rode half far enough—
But that is the trouble with dreams," she said.

Mothers, Mix This At Home for a Bad Cough

You'll be pleasantly surprised when you make up this simple home mixture and try it for a distressing cough or chest cold. It takes but a moment to mix and costs little, but it can be depended upon to give quick and lasting relief.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist. Pour this into a pint bottle; then fill it with plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey. The full pint thus made costs no more than a small bottle of ready-made medicine, yet it is much more effective. It is pure, keeps perfectly and children love its pleasant taste.

This simple remedy has a remarkable three-fold action. It goes right to the seat of trouble, loosens the germ-laden phlegm, and soothes away the inflammation. Part of the medicine is absorbed into the blood, where it acts directly upon the bronchial tubes and thus helps inwardly to throw off the whole trouble with surprising ease.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form, and known as one of the greatest healing agents for severe coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles.

Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

Becomes most popular girl in her set

...after she ended 'B.O.' (Body Odor)

FLOCKS of eager young men seek Betty—now "the most popular girl in her set".

And this is the girl who used to be so lonely, so friendless.

How did she do it? By chance she overheard a whispered conversation—found out that she was guilty of unpardonable "B.O."

Betty knew what that meant—body odor! And then she found an easy way to overcome it, too. She's never lonesome now. She's a favorite with everyone.

"B. O." unpardonable
—yet easy to end

It's almost impossible for anyone with body odor to win popularity and success.

Of course everyone perspires. Even on a cool day, our pores give off as much as a quart of odor-causing waste. We ourselves don't detect its unpleasantness because our sense of smell becomes accustomed to a familiar odor. But to others it is noticeable.

To avoid offending, just wash and bathe often with this delightful, purifying toilet soap—Lifebuoy. Its bland and abundant lather purifies pores, giving bath-to-bath freshness and freedom from body odor.

Healthier complexions, too

This same mild, antiseptic Lifebuoy lather also purifies face pores—keeps complexions smooth and clear. Guards health by removing germs. You'll learn to love Lifebuoy's pleasant, extra-clean scent, which tells you it purifies and which vanishes as you rinse.

My Meta Given

Fresh live lobsters, oysters on the half shell and fresh shrimps offer numerous possibilities for interesting and nutritious dishes.

Fried scallops, served in a lobster and mashed potato ring, is a most previous to serving. Scrub shells well with a brush in cold water. Use a stout screw driver to open the shells. The screw driver is superior to a thin bladed knife. This idea was given me by an oyster merchant. Insert the screw driver gently at the hinge end and pry the shell open. Carefully force the screw driver lengthwise the shell, keeping the screw driver up against the shell and cut the adductor muscle, which is located about the center of the shell. When this muscle is cut the shell opens easily. Scrub and dry the deep side of the shell and lay an oyster in each one. Arrange 6 or 8 on a plate filled with shaved ice. Serve with salt, cayenne and lemon juice or cocktail sauce.

Highly Rated Lobster.

The lobster contests the place of honor with the oyster in the sea fish family. He is probably the most highly rated of crustaceans, considered by many to be the most delicate and delicious of all sea food. He is popular over all the world.

True lobsters are taken from the Atlantic ocean. They are characterized by their big double claws. The shells of the live creatures vary in color, but are generally a bluish or blackish green blotched and spotted on the tubercles, tips, and under parts of pincers with red. Upon cooking the lobster turns the bright scarlet with which we are all familiar.

The average weight of a lobster is one to two and a half pounds. One pound ones are called "chicken lobsters." Heavy ones have been taken but they are not desirable, as the flesh is likely to be tough. A small lobster heavy for its size is the choicest it is the most tender and succulent. Lightness in weight is a defect, no matter what the size.

Lobsters should be bought alive and should be active. They may be easily handled with tongs or by taking hold of the back of the body. The female is usually considered best.

When preparing to broil, split lobster lengthwise down center with a cleaver or a heavy sharp knife. If the claws are plugged there is no danger of being pinched.

Boiled Lobster.

To boil lobsters put them alive head foremost into actively boiling water. Since they have no nerves, the lobster experiences no shock. It requires about 30 minutes to cook a two pound lobster. When done chill in ice water. Otherwise the contained heat will continue the cooking and evaporate much of the natural juiciness. Twist the claws off and separate the tail from the body. Remove the inside shell of the tail by cutting on each side with a sharp knife or scissors. Then lift out the tail muscle, which is the largest single piece of meat in the lobster.

Turn this piece of meat over and remove the intestinal vein, which is a green or yellow color and runs lengthwise. After lifting the body out of the shell separate the edible portion of meat from the tough "dead men" with the sharp point of the knife. Save the green crumbly portion, which is the fat. Break the shell of the claws with a nutcracker. Lift out the large piece of tender meat found here.

An attractive way of serving lobster salad is in the inverted shell garnished with the small claws and sprigs of water cress. The colorful coral found in the back of the female lobster's tail may be grated over the top for additional garnish.

Epicurean Empties the Shell.

Many people eat only the white meat and roe of the lobster. The epicurean empties the shell, devouring all of its contents. The liver is just as wholesome if the fish is fresh. If it is not fresh it should not be eaten at all. The denseness and coarseness of the fibres make it difficult to digest unless it is well masticated.

A close relative of the lobster is the long tailed salt water crustacean, the shrimp. The most common ones are 2 to 3 inches long, a greenish gray with brown dots. On cooking they turn a pinkish red or reddish brown. Shrimps are best when cooked alive. They should be dropped into boiling water.

Scallops are probably the least familiar to most of us of this group of sea fish. Scallops are bivalvular mollusks, somewhat like oysters only larger. The shell is rayed. They are rather tough. Only the muscle used to open and shut the shell is fit to eat. The rest is discarded. Scallops are usually bought with the shell and undesirable part removed.

The following recipes offer a number of unusual methods of serving shellfish.

OYSTER SURPRISE.

Season two cups of hot mashed potatoes with 2 tablespoons rich cream, 2 tablespoons butter, ½ teaspoon salt, dash celery salt, and a little paprika. Whip with a wire egg whip until light and fluffy. Form into little round pats with two oysters hidden in each. Dip in beaten egg, roll in fine bread crumbs and bake in a hot open. Baste occasionally with melted butter. In serving, place a sprig of parsley in each one.

SAUCE FOR RAW OYSTERS.

Take 2 tablespoons tarragon vinegar, 3 tablespoons olive oil, 1½ teaspoons Worcestershire sauce, ¼ cup lemon juice, and 1½ teaspoons tobasco sauce. Season with salt and 1½ grated onions.

OYSTER COCKTAIL.

Chill oysters thoroughly. Put six oysters in each cocktail glass or sherbet cup. Just before sending to the table cover with a dressing made in the following way: Mix a tablespoon mushroom catsup, 1 tablespoon tomota catsup, 1 tablespoon strained lemon juice, 5 drops tobasco sauce, and salt to taste. This quantity is sufficient for 3 cocktails.

OYSTERS A LA REINE.

Broil 12 large oysters on a well greased broiler. Place them on a hot platter and cover with the following sauce: Blend 2 tablespoons butter with 2 tablespoons flour in a sauce pan. Add 2 cups hot rich milk and stir until boiling. Rub yolks of 4 hard cooked eggs smooth with a little milk. Add them to sauce, stir until smooth, then season with salt, pepper, and red pepper. Serve at once.

OYSTER DRESSING FOR TURKEY.

Pour cold water over 4 quarts stale bread. When soft, drain off water and squeeze the bread to remove as much water as possible. Add 2 well beaten eggs, 4 tablespoons butter, salt, pepper, then 1 quart of oysters. Season with sage if desired.

Yield: Sufficient for a 12 pound turkey or 10 servings.

OYSTER BALLS.

Stew 1 quart of oysters in their own liquid until edges curl. Drain and chop oysters fine. Boil 6 potatoes and mash fine. Add ⅓ cup thick cream, 4 egg yolks, then oysters, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, a few gratings nutmeg and enough salt and pepper to suit the taste. When well mixed, form into small balls, flour them, and fry in hot fat (385 degrees F.). Drain and serve hot.

OYSTERS WITH TOMATOES.

Melt 2 tablespoons butter, add aliced onion and cook until brown. Add 1 cup cooked tomatoes and continue cooking until thickened. Add 1 pint oysters and cook until edges curl. Add 1 drop tobasco sauce, ½ teaspoon salt, and 1 tablespoon chopped parsley. Serve on toast.

Yield: 3 servings.

BROILED LIVE LOBSTER.

Wash and drain a lobster weighing about 1½ pounds. Split it lengthwise in two. Take out the one long intestine and the stomach. Crack the claws. Season with salt and pepper. Put between an oiled lobster broiler. Cover the front part of the split side with a piece of strong oiled paper. Sprinkle the entire lobster with melted butter and cook for 15 minutes over a brisk fire. Turn only once. When done, put the lobster on a hot platter and garnish with parsley and slices of lemon. Serve with melted butter.

LOBSTER RING

Rice 2 cups hot potatoes and mix with 2 cups finely chopped lobster meat. Season with 2 teaspoons salt, ⅛ teaspoon cayenne, and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Moisten with 2 stiffly beaten eggs and fold in 1 cup whipped cream. Form mixture in a piled up ring around a pyrex platter. Place in a hot oven until ring is browned. Fill center with fried scallops.

BAKED SHRIMP AND TOMATOES.

2 pounds shrimp
Baking powder biscuit dough
2 tbsp. butter
Pepper, mace, or nutmeg and salt
2 cups stewed tomatoes.

Boil the shrimp for a few minutes until they turn pink and remove the shells. Butter a deep dish well and put in it a layer of baking powder biscuit dough. On the dough put a layer of shrimp with small pieces of butter, pepper, salt and cover with a thin layer of biscuit dough. Add another layer of shrimp and continue until all the ingredients are used, making the top layer of biscuit. Bake in a hot oven (425 degrees F.) for about 45 minutes and serve piping hot.

Yield: Eight servings.

Patterns and How to Use Them

By Clotilde

Lingerie Made from These Attractive Designs Is Equally Desirable for Personal or Gift Use.

QUAINT, pretty breakfast pajamas, showing a tuck-in blouse cut in a deep V both at the back and front, and finished with a gathered ruffle, are shown in pattern No. 3059. There are no sleeves, the armholes being finished with a bias binding. If you prefer, you may finish the armholes with an outside applied band about ⅝ inch wide, matching the most prominent color in the print. These bands must be carefully cut, using the armhole edge of both front and back as a pattern.

The trousers are closed on the left side and the narrow belt indicates the raised waistline. A pocket, ruffle trimmed, is placed on the left side of the trousers. This belt is made separate from the trousers and is tacked to position at the center back, front, and sides.

An interesting suggestion is to make the trousers of orange crêpe de chine, with yellow crêpe for the blouse. Make the ruffles of the orange crêpe, binding with the yellow. Printed crêpe de chine in orchid and beige tones, with plain orchid crêpe, is another good idea, while flat silk crêpe, novelty rayon crêpe, or one of the cotton wash materials would be suitable.

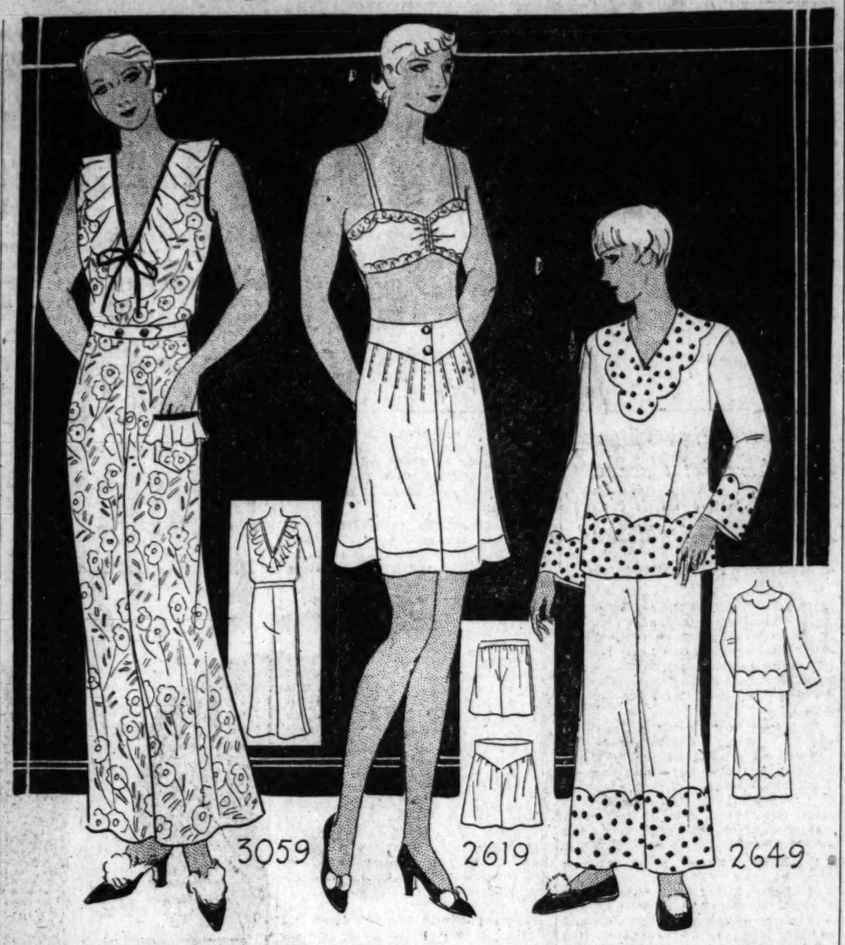
Young girls will like these dainty pajamas made of rayon, cotton broadcloth, crêpe de chine or washable satin; and the pattern, No. 2649, is delightfully easy to cut and use.

Nothing could be easier to make than the trousers. Felled seams are the best for lingerie, as they are so flat and smooth. At the top the trousers are hemmed, and this hem is used as a casing for a drawstring.

The deep V neck is comfortable and makes the jacket easy to slip on and off. The sleeves flare slightly at the lower edge. All edges of this pajama suit will look well finished with an outside applied band. Plain and printed crêpe de chine launders perfectly, and will make pajamas quite smart enough for lounging. Orchid crêpe de chine with the scallops piped or bound in pink, Nile green rayon silk with bands of a deeper shade, piped in black washable faille crêpe ribbon, flesh colored washable crêpe satin, piped in blue, and natural colored pongee with brown piping will make adorable gifts.

A lingerie ensemble consisting of tailored shorts and a fitted bandeau is shown in pattern No. 2619. The shorts can be fitted to a shaped yoke with vertical tucks. This yoke buttons at the left side. Or, if you prefer, the upper edge of the shorts may be gathered to the yoke.

The well fitted bandeau is simple to make, being fitted well at the side seams, and shirred at the center front to a band. It fastens in the back, and the pattern allows for the center back edges being laid in hems. A candy striped washable radium silk with the hip yoke, applied leg bands and binding for the bandeau cut on a "true" bias of the self material is extremely smart. Georgette crêpe, wash satin, crêpe de chine and crêpe satin are also appropriate.



3059—Breakfast pajamas—sizes 14, 16 and 18 years, and 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅞ yards of 35 inch material with 3¾ yards of binding and ¾ yard of 35 inch contrasting.

2619—Lingerie ensemble—sizes 16 and 18 years and 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 1¾ yards of 36 inch material with 2½ yards of trimming.

2649—Pajamas for the junior miss—sizes 6, 8, 10, 12, 14 and 16 years. Size 16 requires 5 yards of 40 inch material with 1¼ yards of 36 inch contrasting. A pattern for the stuffed elephant is included.

Why Marriages Skid

By Doris Blake

Too Many Young Americans Wed Only to Find that Their Excessively Romantic Ideas Fail to Stand Up Under the Reality of Every Day Life.

HESITANTLY, now and then, some one suggests that possibly were Americans to adopt the quaint Spanish, French, and Italian custom of parental marriage arrangement, our divorce market would experience a noticeable slump. The difficulty with the suggestion, however, is that it attracts only an audience of parents. The generation most concerned with mating is off exercising its prerogative to choose the mate with the strongest personal appeal, regardless of whether the choice will get the parental blessing or even parental liking. It's their affair. Their gamble. Their choice to stand by—at least until such time as a call at a lawyer's office seems the desirable step.

Whether a parental voice in mate-choosing is desirable is not likely to prove an experiment in our midst with the elective freedom of generations behind our young people. So THAT is out as a suggestion. Our young people wouldn't even call it a "quaint" custom. They'd call it stupid, silly and diametrically opposed to their own personal views on marriage, or which romance is not the major, but the whole ingredient.

Attacks Marriage Ideas.

In an article in a current monthly, Katharine Fullerton Gerould attacks our excessively romantic ideas about marriage as the chief trouble instigator after marriage is entered. Our increasing divorce ratio is not, in Mrs. Gerould's opinion, due, as commonly claimed, to economic causes, to woman's independence, to birth control nor to the other well known offerings in the cause list. It is the result of looking at marriage not as a social contract but as a purely individual contract with high romantic satisfaction as the lever upon which it should swing. A "white-hot emotional perfection"—is the expression the well known writer uses to depict what Americans expect.

"As long as personal happiness is made the only desideratum in marriage the divorce courts will be full," Mrs. Gerould predicts. The responsibility for our current bemuddled state of mind and heart toward marriage, Mrs. Gerould puts upon the shoulders of the great romantic poets and novelists of the nineteenth century.

"Poets have been hymning romantic love for centuries, but they did not make it synonymous with marriage," she explains. "It no more occurred to them in the Middle Ages that you would be romantic about your wife or your husband than it occurred to Dante to want to marry Beatrice or to refrain from marrying Gemma. Marriage was a social matter, love a personal one. Sometimes husband and wife did fall in love and remain in love with each other, but that was a blessing quite outside of the contract."

As It Ought to Be.

Charlotte Bronte, in Jane Eyre, presents a picture of what she thought marriage ought to be. Jane says: "I have now been married ten years. I know what it is to live entirely for and with what I love best on earth. I hold myself supremely blest—blest beyond what language can express. Because I am my husband's life as fully as he is mine. No woman was ever nearer to her mate than I am—ever more absolutely bone of his bone, flesh of his flesh. I know no weariness of my husband's society. He knows none of mine . . . to be together is for us to be at once as free as in solitude, as gay as in company."

That picture of marriage, or something closely kin to it, is the emotional perfection that three generations of young Americans have hugged to their romantic bosoms, Mrs. Gerould holds.

When the day comes that one or other of the couple does not feel "supremely blest" or when "to be together is not as gay as in company" he or she feels defrauded of something they had every right to expect from their bringing up on purely romantic notions of wedlock.

Not that any one would have wedlock stripped of romance. But experience surely proves that marriage, even romantic marriage, has social aspects; that as the years proceed, married couples will find themselves, as Mrs. Gerould points out, not only lovers, but householders, parents and members of a social group and that these other relations carry with them responsibilities.

Formula for Success.

Rather than moralize on DUTY, a word with an ugly sound to youth, the suggestion is made in training the young for the great adventure that shall not end in divorce to substitute for some of the romantic notions about marriage the formula that goes with success in any worthwhile venture. Teach them that success doesn't merely happen. A technic, an art, or sleight of hand is required. That marrying for love in no wise is assurance that the marriage will take care of itself. That the cheated feeling, the self-pity, which feelings Mrs. Gerould claims to lead to divorce most often, are born of an impossible faith in the power of love as it is erroneously conceived in the hearts of the American young.

The assumption of the right to happiness without the art of creating happiness is an error into which potential divorce getters fall. Happiness in a permanent relation has to take into account all sorts of things, even to the imperfection of the human being one once thought divinely perfect. There is a state of arrested development in man or woman who, after ten years of married life, still argues for happiness on the basis of the ecstacy that existed the first six months of marriage, say, or when the two first fell madly and passionately in love.

Why Mention Love?

"Dear Miss Blake: I love the girl I used to take out. Which is the best way to ask her if she still loves me?

"ANXIOUS."

Don't mention love—just ask if you may see her again.

Send a Card.

"Dear Miss Blake: I quarreled with my boy friend. His birthday is soon. Should I send him a card?

"SHORTY."

SIDE-STEP.

No more shall I give good advice,
No, not for love; no, not for price,
I shall not say, "Now, dear, be nice,
And strictly on the level."

Decide upon your course alone,
Lest in the future you make moan
About the joys you might have known
Had you gone to the devil.

In hell or heaven stake your claim
But do not try to shift the blame.

A Friend in Need

By Sally Joy Brown

Your Discarded Clothing Will Lighten the Anguish Which Accompanies Poverty and Unemployment.

AT this time of year, for no strange reason, everyone's fancy turns to thoughts of Christmas. You are busy with lists, or shopping or plans of parties that will fill your holiday calendar, and despite the fact that we are not exactly riding on the wings of prosperity most of us look forward to a gay, cheerful season.

However, there will be hundreds who were filled with Christmas spirit last year because they had jobs and comfortable homes and something to be gay and cheerful about. This year they are out of work, they don't have enough to eat, and they are experiencing all the anguish which accompanies poverty and unemployment. And so, we ask you this year more than any other to pause in your happy planning and consider these unfortunates. Theirs won't be a day of rejoicing but perhaps with your efforts they may be at least comfortable.

Most of them don't have sufficient clothing to withstand the cold weather. You can help by giving garments of yours which are no longer being worn. Overcoats for the men who must go out daily in their search for work; heavy underwear, shoes, stockings, mittens, and coats for the school children; clothing for the women who also are breadwinners are much in demand. We have many requests for heating stoves. Your old blankets and quilts can be put to good use, too.

Most of us and especially those with large families have such articles to dispose of now and then. Please do not relegate them to the ash heap if there is any service left in them, for they mean warmth and comfort to the needy families who are suffering. When you have taken inventory write me what you have to give and I'll be glad to tell you about some persons who will appreciate your timely gift.

Shut-In Wants Magazines.

"I am a shut-in and am asking you please to send me some books and magazines. I have been ill for many months and reading helps me to forget. I am not able to purchase reading matter. N. P."

This shut-in writes to us from a small town in Illinois. Won't you help to make her days more cheerful by giving her the magazines you've finished reading and any books you do not care to keep?

You Meet Septics in the movies!

There is a certain fastidiousness which habits of cleanliness cannot achieve alone. They are you sometimes suspect of carelessness may have bathed within the hour.

If you are a septic, soap and water can not solve the difficulty. Nor will any reasonable neutralize unpleasant vaporings of the body or the breath for any length of time.

Nobody is septic by nature. It is a condition anyone can correct. Just a few days are sufficient to take the taint out of perspiration, and render one's breath as pure as can be; and this perfect personal cleanliness made permanent. Ask any doctor—or nurse—about Stuart's Calcium Wafers.

You may not know whether you are a septic. Try Stuart's Calcium Wafers, and see! If there is any stagnant matter in the system, everything will speedily be sweet and clean. Your skin will be less acrid; color improved; the colonic correction even brightens eyes and whitens teeth! And you will never need another harsh cathartic from the time you have learned to prevent even semi-constipation by just occasionally taking a tiny calcium wafer.

MAKE THIS TEST

A five-day test should prove to you very conclusively the system aused for Stuart's Calcium Wafers and the decided benefit from these little tablets. Your druggist has them—the test size for points is 10c. Or the family size, 60c.

The Quirks of a Wild Girl's Heart

By ACHMED ABDULLAH

Daughter of a Tartar, Hirfa's Soul Revolted Against the Peace-Loving Nature of the Kara-Bayraks; Then the Rogue Terek, with His Handsome Face and Slick Tongue, Came to Carry Her Away.

THERE had been rain earlier in the afternoon, rain gusty and cool, washing the peaks and the valleys, the fallow and the sown. Now no speck of dust was on this fine, broad world, as clean as if it had been new created by the Lord Allah; the land was sinking into the calm which evening ever brings to our hills, drowsing, mellowing, sweet with the tang of pine and the chuckle of tawny-winged thrush and blue-winged wren; and so—with day's work done and well done, the seeding plentifully strewn, the long-horned, shaggy cattle lowing in the pens, and the full-uddered goats leaping home from the upper pastures—there was music and rejoicing and throaty laughter in the hujra, the communal hall of the Kara-Bayrak tribe of Afghans, that faced the simple village mosque with its pride of stout walls and sloping roof, freshly thatched and massive, corbel-stepped gables.

Here they were gathered; the strong, ruddy, bearded peasants with their wives and mothers, their daughters and sisters, women of the free north, thus unveiled, high-colored, wide-bosomed—and they drank tea flavored with wild herbs, they munched dried sunflower seeds and swapped the news of the countryside, while Akbar Jan, perched in the nook of a window, shut his eyes as he played on his seven-stringed Tartar fiddle, pumping with ecstasy from the source of melody that aye bubbled in his heart.

Ancient Central Asian lilts he thrummed: "The Wind That Shakes the Fir Trees" and "Fly, Hawk, Fly!" and "Kandahar, the King's Town."

Then somebody hummed. Somebody raised a rough voice in song.

Soon they all were singing—singing the old songs—the songs of feud; the stirring songs of heroes; the songs of foray and raid and great loot; the savage, crimson songs that, high up, the eagles echo shrilly when they hear them and fall to fighting in mid air with cracking beaks and tearing talons; the brave songs of yesteryear before peace had come to the hills and plains; the songs of grim strife which might remind a graybeard of former days when he had stalked about the world with naked dagger always on hip, and which, belike, might put his wife's mind on the bitter, black grief that people are born to—until Hamdi Gur Khan, the young chief of the Kara-Bayrak, clapped his hands and there was silence.

"Enough of such tunes!" he said—and his eyes sought those of red-haired Hirfa, who would not look his way. "Play us a dance, O fiddler!"

"Yes—a dance!" came the chorus.

"A dance, O son of the world!"

"Give us 'The Miller of Samarkand'!"

So "The Miller of Samarkand" it was—a melody with a twist to it and a cunning quirk that set feet to tapping and supple hips to swaying and silver anklets to ringing like bells; that, presently, set the hard ground to shaking under the thud of rawhide Afghan boots as young and old swung into the gay rhythm of the fling, while even the green-turbaned Moslem priest forgot his sacerdotal dignity and showed a leg that was handsome and straight enough for a man of his age . . . and no girl there was here around whom the lads flocked more thickly, like bees to the honey pot, asking for the favor of a dance, than Hirfa, the only daughter of Mehmet Yar, the mutton butcher—and, by the same token, no girl who gave more quick and curt refusal.

Like a Young Pine

She was the prettiest hereabouts, with a slim, strong height like a young pine, her hair like waves of red copper rolling over the snow of her forehead, and a riddle in her gray eyes which gave the notion to a man to look again—and never to look away; and, as to the stiff haughtiness of her, saying "I do not wish to dance" to this and "I do not care to dance" to that—why, there was no reason for it at all to believe the grandmothers who squatted about the walls, talking in whispers.

"Wah"—angrily asked one—"what does she think she is—she with her airs and graces?"

"By the Book Revealed," excitedly demanded one who had three unmarried granddaughters of ripe years, "what do the boys see in her?"

"The devil alone knoweth!"

"Yesterday, the telling goes, our chief offered her his hand in honorable marriage—offered her the pick of his fine cattle as a wedding portion."

"And she refused?"

"Indeed!"

"The Lord His mercy!"

"Whom can she be waiting for?"

"Perhaps"—sardonically—"the grand kahn of High Tartary?"

"Or the shah of Persia?"

"Or the sultan of the British?"

"What do the boys see in her?"

"Why do they permit her to step on them with the impudent stepping of her feet?"

"And she with less manners than a yearling camel."

"Nor her ears so small—by the red pig's bristles!—nor her nose so straight."

A double lie, this last statement, which just then was being contradicted, in terms emphatic as well as florid, by Hamdi Gur Khan, the chief, who was telling Hirfa in an undertone that her face was like a baffling, sweet melody floating on the current of a far wind, that all Allah's mountains must have stood around to shelter her birth, and that a glance of her gray eyes was like the sudden unsheathing of a bright sword blade.

Hirfa laughed.

"Blade?" she echoed mockingly. "Ah"—with a sweeping, contemptuous gesture that included half a dozen of the younger men who were near—"what do you know of blades and the brave wielding of blades? You sing of war—the old songs—O, yes—so boldly. But you speak softly and turn tail when steel clanks and the drums beat!"

It was the truth.

It had been the truth since, almost half a century earlier, in the days when Hamdi Gur Khan's grandfather had been chief, a Persian dervish, a holy man, had gone through these northern hills, proclaiming the gospel of peace from village to village.

"Peace, O Moslems! Let us have peace!" had been his everlasting prayer. "I bring the word of forgiveness, O brothers!" he had preached. "The word of gentle happiness! The word of Allah the king!"

At first the villagers had sneered at this amazing creed. They had said:

"Yours is a new Allah—a weak Allah—a sickly Allah wrapped in cotton. Ours is the Allah of hard daring. Be pleased to leave our hills, O creature!"

But the Persian had not left. He had continued to proclaim the blessings of peace; had done it so fervently and so convincingly that, presently, the tribesmen had ceased from their sneering and had at last been completely carried away by the man's eloquence until, literally, they had forged their broad scimitars into plowshares and their small dirks into spikes for their harrows.

And it was as if nature, these fifty years, had echoed the prayer for peace with a message of plenty—a plenty doubly brimming since fists that had once clutched weapon hilts were now busy with orderly tasks of husbandry. Somehow, it seemed, the winters grudged to come. Grassy season after grassy season, the valleys were thick with herds and crops. The orchards were a revelry of fruit. Wild birds swarmed in the heather; a man could dip his creel into any of a dozen pools and bring out salmon or trout rolling with fat; food piled richly at the poorest peasant's very door; and it was pleasant to see, in the evening, the smoke wreaths from clean, happy hearths linger on the quiet air—to hear later at night the villagers, gathered in the hujra, sing the ancient ballads of their clan; the rhymed, rowdy, rollicking tales of stout fellows taking the road with pointed steel to the fore, their chief astride a white stallion whose mane was dyed scarlet in sign of strife.

Singing these same ballads they were. No longer living them. Here Hirfa was right—and that she alone should be regretting the days when men had followed the sword trade was not altogether strange.

For her father, Mehmet Yar, was not of the Kara-Bayrak tribe. He was not even an Afghan but a Tartar from the far northern steppes.

Bent and Wizened

A good many years earlier he had been a freebooter, who had slashed through the land with a tail of thirty men and thirty grand, crooked blades—demanding and obtaining tribute. Then misfortune had overtaken him. Thrown by his horse, he had smashed his right leg; and, with blood poisoning setting in, it had been amputated at the knee.

His followers had shrugged their shoulders. What good, they had demanded, was a one legged man when it came to riding and raiding?

So they had left him behind; and—for the love of Allah the King and because of the pity in their souls—the Kara-Bayrak, the very people whom Mehmet Yar had robbed, had given him asylum. He had married a girl of the tribe; had become the village butcher.

Today he went bent and wizened, with hardly enough strength to wield his cleaver and quarter a sheep. Today he was quite as mild as the other peasants—though his lips would curl in a thin, hard smile when he heard his daughter jeering at peace and longing for strife, as she did tonight.

"Show me a man," she exclaimed, "who does not cringe and fawn and swallow insults! Show me a man who has a fidget in his scabbard and his sword arm!"

Again she turned to the young men. Again she mocked them, accused them—nor unjustly:

"Did you not eat dirt last month and pay gold on clinking gold when the amir's tax gatherers came and demanded twice what they had the right to demand? And when the black-bearded captain rode through our hills recruiting, asking you to try a trip with the amir's soldiery to the foreign wars—ah—was there a single one amongst you who listened to the red thump of the drums and rode along with him?"

Hamdi Gur Khan was honestly puzzled.

"Why should we listen to the drums," he demanded, "when we might listen to the song of the plow—the song of the harrow—the song of lowing cattle?"

"Cattle are bred to the yoke. And the plow squeaks. And the harrow grates on my ear."

"And yet we are happy, Hirfa. We are content."

"Because you are cowards!" she interrupted. "And you dare to speak of love—to me! Show me the lad who is fearless, the lad who can roar, the lad who can fight—and I'll trot, like a good hound, at the heel of him——"

Then suddenly she was silent, as a loud, guttural voice came from the door:

"Here—by the teeth of Mohammed the Redeemer—is such a lad, O moon of the world! For I am the one who picks his enemies as he goes along—wah—who slays them and eats them raw—without salt or pepper or pungent onion juice!"

And the villagers were startled.

They turned.

They saw a stranger on the threshold.

He was tall, six foot of bone and brawn, apple-colored, russet-bearded, hooknosed, blue-eyed. His clothes were of leather and rough earth-brown wool. His shaggy fur cap was immense and cocked arrogantly over his left ear. He was armed with a great straight naked sword which he held in both hands, bending it across his body as if it were a switch; and, tonight as always, boastings and braggings welled from his lips like honey from a broken crock—boastings and braggings that, as often as not, had the trick of becoming facts.

A Swishing Blade

So here he stood, as big and—let us admit it—as handsome a rogue as you might meet in seven years, winking a brazen eye at Hirfa and saying to her in a heavy whisper that carried clear across the room:

"Presently, O rejoicer, I shall attend to the matter of your slender red lips!"

Then he faced the tribesmen.

"I want food—nor let it be scanty," he declared in a bullying sort of trumpet. "I want drink—and the best of it. I want a couch to rest on softly. And, in the morning, let me have two fine horses. One to carry this lusty man who is myself. And the other to carry whatever trinkets and jewels I may decide to take away from you."

He took a step forward.

"By the honor of my nose!" he announced, swelling out his chest. "'Grab-the-Purse' is my title! 'Cut-the-Throat' was my father's title! 'Blood-and-Bones' is my slogan! 'Hack-and-Hew' is my creed, and 'Spare not the women and children' my evening prayer!"

Here were amazing words—though words even more amazing were yet to come.

For, laughing with full, red lips that revealed his teeth gleaming white and square against his ruddy skin, he went on:

"Once, and only once in all my life, was I angry—really angry. And on that memorable occasion—may Allah not grant me salvation if my tongue slips on the path of truth!—seven kings died of fright, while seventy-seven strong captains howled like dogs and became insane!"

He paused; then inquired:

"And how does that strike you, O ignoble and base born cattle?"

Not that Terek Haydar—for such was his name, and he was a Turkoman by race, and a bravo, a bully, a swash-buckler by trade—had improvised this neat little speech on the spur of the moment. On the contrary, these last few years, roaming his lawless way through the mountains and plains of Central Asia, he had employed it frequently; and it had always resulted in a pleasant fight—often in pleasant loot—and, occasionally, in wounds to which various scars on his body bore witness.

So, now, standing there with legs broadly straddled, savoring the foretaste of his red deed, he sent his blade swishing and whistling through the air.

"Come on!" he invited jovially. "Who is for a bit of a row—with steel—or fist, if you prefer?"

And he rolled up his sleeves; he flexed his hairy, muscle-packed arms; and he was utterly taken aback when, instead of yells of defiance and weapons leaping to eager hands, the clansmen salaamed and their chief said:

"Welcome, O son of Adam! Roast mutton you shall have—and fruit—and no lack of milk, and, in the morning, two horses of your own choosing."

Terek did not believe his ears.

"You——" he stammered, "you mean it?"

"Indeed!"

"You—O—you bid me welcome?"

"Heartily!"

Terek stared at the other.

Why, he thought, the man was not jesting; was ready, for the sake of his skin's safety to have his nose pulled and dirt rubbed in his beard!

It was a new experience, a disagreeable experience—and it roused him worse than insults or taunts might have done. For, somehow, it took the fun out of the adventure, the high, keen thrill.

"Please, O Moslems!" he begged. "Just the tiniest edge of a row—the tiniest spurt of bloodletting."

"No! We are a weaponless folk."

"You have your fists."

"Aye—for the proper tilling of our fields!"

Terek shook his head. This was beyond his naive comprehension.

"Is there not one amongst you, not a single one," he asked, with a queer note of humility in his voice, "who will oblige me with a small fight?"

"No!" repeated Hamdi Gur Khan.

"No, no!" came the tribesmen's chorus, while the priest asserted sonorously: "We believe in peace—and praise the Lord's manifold bounties!"

A reply which left Terek Haydar helpless and his sword unoccupied, since it was not in his simple, crude code to strike those who did not resist; and so he had to be satisfied with a final volley of salty abuse, winding up:

"Ah—all the curses of the black rocks on you—and the curses of the gray winds, O cowards!"

"Cowards!" echoed Hirfa, facing the Kara-Bayrak with blazing eyes. "Wah—your cowardice is a mock throughout Afghanistan and High Tartary."

"Throughout the world!" chimed in Terek. "Almost it is in my mind to take my two feet away from here—to leave you to stew and bubble in the evil sauce of your disgrace. But," he sighed, "I have traveled the many miles. I am weary. Bring food and drink. And, after I have eaten my fill, go away, all of you, except"—and he walked up to Hirfa—"you, O heart of three roses!"

He smiled at her.

"I like you!" he declared. "I like you fine! Such a girl you are—with hair like red silk and eyes that shine, and skin smooth as a trout's back."

His ill temper disappeared. For he saw Hirfa blush, saw her beautiful; and he continued:

"Did you not say that you would follow the fearless lad—the lad who can roar—the lad who can fight? By the Prophet—me you shall follow! Tomorrow you and I shall take the road together—and the sweet road it will be for me with your hand in mine!"

He took her in his arms. He was about to kiss her, when suddenly she tore herself free. She struck him across the face with her small, hard fist.

"I hate you!" she cried.

He rubbed his cheek.

"Do you, indeed?" he demanded.

He caught her again. He held her, struggling, at arm's length.

ILLUSTRATION BY EDWARD RYAN.

So here he stood, as big and—let us admit it—as handsome a rogue as you might meet in seven years, winking a brazen eye at Hirfa and saying to her in a heavy whisper that carried clear across the rooms: "Presently, O rejoicer, I shall attend to the matter of your slender red lips!"

"And yet I have the notion," he went on, "that some day you will be warm and friendly to the crook of my elbow—that some day you will be begging me for a kiss of my mouth!"

He let her go then. She sobbed.

"I hate you—hate you!" she repeated.

And she turned; she ran from the hujra, while Terek laughed carelessly.

So did the tribesmen laugh. Thin was their laughter and cruel.

For here was this haughty, wilful girl, who had refused the best and richest of them and had called them cowards, being humbled in her turn. —Allah—they thought—there was justice in the world . . . and they made the stranger welcome. They brought him meat and fruit and milk and wheaten bread, and a bottle or two of treasured Persian wine; and later on they squatted in a circle and listened, while Terek, reclining at his ease, well fed and temporarily at peace with the world, told them tales.

Tales of Himself

Tales about himself and his prowess. And some of these tales were true, and some—may the Lord forgive him his trespasses!—were not, although he preceded each and every one with a resounding: "May my right hand wither if I lie!" and a hard look around the group of clansmen as if to warn them:

"Who doubts my word, dies the death!"

Thus, if doubt they did, they said never a word, winked never an eye—not even when he related how he was the seventh son of a seventh son and, miraculously, had been born on the seventh day of the seventh moon; how, with his mother's milk not yet dry on his lips, he had tamed a stallion that had thrown five strong nomads and killed two; how, two months after his first tooth had come, he had handled sword and dagger with the skill of an expert; how, in all the proud cities he visited, silken ladders dropped from screened balconies and henna-stained fingers tossed roses at his feet; how, in Kabul alone, he had loved, and been loved by, nineteen times nineteen beautiful women, and all of them wives or daughters of powerful barons; how, single-handed, he had gone into Persia, levying rowdy war and conquering the land between border and border; and how—a nickname which he invented on the spur of the moment—he was known from Delhi to Kandahar as "that bright disaster."

"Wah," he declared, finishing the second bottle of Persian wine, "you might as well try and dam the waters of the seven seas when Terek is under way to slay and raid and loot! For battered I am and lusty—hard-bitten and tough—crafty in strife—never wearied in crimson adventure! A thousand men have I killed in fair fight—and found their death rattle a most soothing lullaby! Thus in war! And, in peace, modest and gracious—candid and resolute—kindly and affable! Nor ever bragging, and," with a roar that shook the rafters, "whoever says the opposite, his throat I shall slit from ear to ear!"

Thus far into the night the villagers' applause drifting out of the hujra, while, in her father's house, Hirfa sobbed and sobbed, repeating to herself:

"I hate him!"

Ah—she thought—he had taken her in his arms; had offered her his kisses; had offered them, doubtless, for the coarse sport and jest of it—as he fought for the coarse sport and jest of it.

How cruel he was—and his arms so strong—and his hair so curly! And—for there were the strange quirks of a wild girl's heart—she wondered if his hair was soft to the touch.

Then, quickly, she interrupted her thought. She whispered:

"I hate him! Hayah—" the savage wish—"may he die before the month of tomorrow's morning!"

Early the next day, leading two horses, Hamdi Gur Khan came to the hujra where Terek had slept.

"The finest beasts we have," he said.

But Terek replied:

"Take them back. I shall stay here."

"Oh. How long?"

"Maybe a day. Maybe a week. Unless," with a wolfish smile, "I am not welcome."

"As welcome as rain after drought!" was the hasty rejoinder.

"Which is as it should be. By the way—that girl last night—what is her name?"

"Hirfa."

"And she lives where?"

The chief was jealous. He was angry. But fear, as he looked at Terek's reckless sword, conquered both; and he answered:

"Over yonder—at the end of the village—the small, gray house."

"Good!"

And Terek turned on his heel and, a few minutes later, bowed to Hirfa.

"You have changed your mind?" he asked.

"About what?"

"About this business of my kisses—and yours."

"Why should I kiss you?"

"No reason—" was the calm reply—"except my desire."

She blushed; grew furious at him, more furious at herself—for blushing.

In His Arms

She hated him—she thought—hated his great strength, his great height, his great boasting; hated the way he cocked his bonnet and the way he dragged his sword; hated his nose, his eyes, his curly hair. And yet his eyes—as he stared at her—how cloudy-blue they were—like rain on the glens and the wind blowing! And his hair—she wondered, as she had wondered last night—was it soft to the touch?

O—soft as silk or hard as granite—what did she care? She hated him—hated him—and she said so, in a loud voice:

"I hate you!"

"Why?"

"Because you—you are a ruffian—cruel—coarse—lawless."

"And bold—and fearless! And did you not say yesterday that you would follow the bold, fearless lad?"

"Even in the matter of a bold, fearless lad a girl may have her choice."

"You cannot choose better than the best! You cannot choose better than myself, O delight! Tell me"—he went on, coming a step nearer—"your lips—have they ever been kissed?"

"What is it to you?"

"A great deal. For if your lips are still untouched—hai—" with a bellowing laugh—"let me be the first to teach you the ways of the wicked world!"

Again, as on the preceding evening, he took her in his arms. Again she struggled; freed herself; struck him across the face and cried:

"I hate you!"

She ran into the house; she slammed the door; and she would have been surprised had she peered through the window and taken a look at him.

For, just then, there was about him little of the tough man of the sword. Puzzled he seemed, and hurt and unhappy and rather boyish as, swiftly, at that moment, the knowledge came to him that she was to him the treasure of all the women on earth . . . and, morosely, he said to himself:

"I love her—but she does not love me. My heart burns with the flaming torches of passion—but her heart is as cold as clay. And there you have a bleak, bitter truth for a bleak, bitter day!"

Yet it was typical of him that his humility did not last long; that, almost at once, his cheerful mood returned and he thought:

"Wah—round and round this broad world, where is there my equal? I shall ask her again—this afternoon."

He did—to receive the same reply:

"I hate you!"

To ask the same question the next day and the next and the next until, exasperated, she shouted:

"Do you not understand our good Afghan language, O great buffalo? I hate you! Never my lips to yours! Never—never—never!"

He shrugged his shoulders. He said:

"Other girls have told me so in the past—and I taught them to love me—and I did not find the teaching unpleasant nor they the learning. Here, until you change your mind, must I remain—for which, I am sure, your tribesmen will bless neither you nor me."

He was right.

It was not that the Kara-Bayrak grudged him food or drink or bed. What did worry them—what, at least, worried the chief, the priest, the older men and the women—was the fact that Terek's savage tales were beginning to find a certain echo in the hearts of the younger tribesmen when at night, in the hujra, he announced boastfully:

"It is easy to conquer. Easy to help yourself to the pick of the world. See me now—" standing up straight—"a desperate man if ever there lived one—and ready to build me an empire. And what do I need? No more than seven strong men to follow me."

"Only seven?"—wonderingly.

"Aye! With seven men, on a fine, foggy night, surprising the garrison at the gate and putting it to the sword, I can take the town of Balkh, four days from here, and sweat gold out of the paunchy bazaar merchants and levy from their wives a toll of honeyed kisses. Being victorious, I shall gather there other warriors. Perhaps a hundred. Enough to attack Kandahar. Kandahar falls. I treat it generously, exacting no more than a thousand camel loads of jewels—and, out of gratitude and admiration, every proper male of that town will follow my banner. Seven hundred men then! At least seven hundred tall men riding to battle! And—ah—" his imagination grew wings; he threw his chin up and stamped with his foot— "I cross the border. India is before me. India trembles. I conquer Peshawar. I swoop Delhi and the splendid places of the south into my breeches. I confer titles and riches upon my faithful captains. More warriors enlist under my escutcheon until—by Allah and by Allah!—I have a host—with power over life and limb, over cities and plains—and the neighboring kings holding their very breath attendant upon my notions and whims. And then"—grandiosely—"I conquer China!"

"All of it?" thinly demanded Hamdi Gur Khan.

"Every single last square mile, O regrettable wart!" roared Terek, giving him a black look. "For that on which I, Emperor Terek, cast a favoring eye, must be mine—or Allah's! China—say I! And if those yellow heathens resist, let them burn in the flame of my wrath!"

He drew his sword.

"Who is with me?" he asked. "Who is for golden loot and red deeds?"

So he spoke—and the eyes of some of the younger tribesmen glittered with excitement; and it was as if, at this rough man's bidding, sixty years of tranquil happiness would be thrown to the winds; and an old grandmother, who remembered former days of strife, whispered:

"The Lord protect us! Here is an end to our white peace, our sweet peace, and once again it will be the fingering of steel, and the salt taste of a man's blood, the salt taste of a woman's tears."

But, for a while at least, her fears seemed groundless. There was no riding to war, since Terek would not take the road without Hirfa—Hirfa who had ever the same answer to his pleading:

"I hate you!"

He wondered why it should be so.

He loved her—such was the sum total of his reasoning—so why did she not love him?

Saved by a Shower

And then one day he told himself that he knew. She wanted marriage. Yes. That was it. For she was different from the lawless women he had known in the past.

He sighed a little.

Ah, he thought, marriage meant iron bonds; it meant an end to freedom; and hitherto he had always trod a careless path, happening on many a jovial adventure, many a crimson mouth of kisses.

Still, marriage it must be, and that afternoon he told Hirfa:

"I have decided."

"What?"

"I shall marry you, O crusher of hearts. When shall we go before the priest?"

"Never!"

"Eh?"

"Never, never!"

"But—listen——"

"I shall not listen! Ah—and were you the amir of the Afghans himself, in glory of emeralds and rich brocades, I would still say to you, 'Leave me alone! I hate you!'"

Cold her words; contemptuous. They cut through him like a sword. Here, he said to himself, between this girl's narrow hands, was his life's aim and happiness—and she so hard on him, like a rampart of stone! And he did not know that often, when she was alone, she would think of him; would think how she hated him; would wish savagely, as on that first night: "May he die before the month of tomorrow's morning!" And then, since there were again the strange quirks of a wild girl's heart, she would whisper quickly:

"Dear God, let not my wish come true!"

How her heart throbbed and ached—ached yet more as, presently, from end to end of the valley, angry whispers were being heard that Terek, not content with his fame as a fighter, was adding thereto a reputation as a lover.

For Terek—had Hirfa known—was wondering if jealousy might not turn the trick with her.

Perhaps, he imagined, if she saw him courting other women — the brown-haired daughter of the blacksmith—or the priest's gray-eyed wife?

He made love to the latter one afternoon where she stood on the threshold of her husband's house, a tall, lean, handsome hillwoman.

"Decidedly," he declared, walking up to her with a heavy swagger, "I have seen lips less soft than yours and a bosom less pleasantly rounded. Aye—you are the one for my father's only son."

Only her hasty retreat into the house and a shower of earthen pots thrown by her two servant girls saved her from his rough embrace. He laughed. He strolled away; and, later on, when the priest remonstrated with him, he said with calm arrogance:

"What can I do? It is a sending of fate. You see — I fall in love so readily."

An Aching Heart

Indeed, it seemed so; and within the week—since Terek had a way with the women, a way that was the glint and fire in his eyes, the careless swing of his shoulders, and his soft voice that, belike, could hold a spice of cruelty at times—the forest might have whispered many a secret of golden words and red kisses. Thus scandal reared its ugly head; the Kara-Bayrak would have been glad to see Terek on his way, north, east, west, anywhere at all; and one day Hamdi Gur Khan, urged on by the clansmen, broached the subject, mentioning, discreetly as he thought, that winter would soon come storming across the mountains and that, south in India, there was always warm, hearty summer.

Terek smiled at him as he might at a babbling child.

"I love cold weather," he replied, caressing his sword. "I love this valley. I love the men here and—may I be permitted to admit it?—the women. Here I shall live and here—may Allah grant it be not for many years!—I shall die."

He walked away, and, meeting Hirfa near the mosque, he told her negligently, over his shoulder:

"I cannot stay to pass the time of day with you, my darling. For up there"—pointing toward the forest—"a woman is waiting for me—and she has a sweet curve to her cheek the like of which is seldom seen."

Hirfa stared after him. Her heart ached.

She thought:

"I hate him!"

Then she made up her mind. She went to the house of the chief.

"You love me?" she asked straight out.

"I do—" replied Hamdi Gur Khan—"and you know I do."

"And how would you prove your love?"

"I shall give you my fine cattle—my rich orchards—my late mother's jewels."

"Things, things!" she interrupted contemptuously. "I want deeds!"

"Deeds?"

"Yes!"

"But—what——?"

"There is this Terek! He has brought unhappiness into our hills. He must go from here."

"I mentioned it to him. And—he refused."

"Use force! Kill him—if need be!"

"No, no!" The chief paled. "I am a man of peace."

"A helpless, weak spined man of peace!" she mocked.

"The Lord Allah will be my shield!"

"Not much of a shield against the steel clanking ruffian! Wah—he eats the food of the Kara-Bayrak—he drinks their drinks—he kisses their women—and they salaam and say: 'Be welcome!' Wah, wah—the hills are filled with laughter at your disgrace! It is as I told you before: you are cowards—all of you!"

"But what—what can we do?"

"You are many—and he is one!"

"He has his sword—the grand, ruthless fighter he is—and we are unarmed!"

"But at night—when he sleeps—"

"I have looked at him when he sleeps—and he cuddles his blade to his side as if it were his bride. Also—if only his sword were out of the way!"

"You mean it?" Hirfa cut in quickly. "If his sword were out of the way, you would——?"

"Yes!"

"Listen."

She spoke for quite a while; and when she had finished, Hamdi Gur Khan exclaimed triumphantly:

"I shall do it—for the sake of my love!"

It was long past midnight when Terek, asleep on his couch, was startled by a noise on the threshold. He sat up, at once wide awake, sword ready in hand.

Dim in the moonlight he saw a girl. He heard her whisper:

"It is I—Hirfa!"

He walked up to her; he saw that she was in tears; and he demanded:

"What has happened, my pigeon!"

"My Very Slogan"

Then, just as she had asked Hamdi Gur Khan on the preceding afternoon, she now asked Terek: "You love me?"—and when he swore a great oath that she was the heart of his heart and the soul of his soul, she told him, as she had told Hamdi Gur Khan:

"I want deeds!"

"Deeds!" he echoed. "My very slogan! Say the word—and I shall spill a dozen kings red and bloody at your feet! Or, should you have a notion in the way of proud castles you wish me to conquer for you, I shall——"

"I want neither kings nor castles!"

"What do you want?"

"Revenge!"

"Revenge?"

"Yes!"

"On whom? Who has harmed you?"

"Hamdi Gur Khan."

"What has he done?"

"He came to my house a short time ago. He—he insulted me."

"Allah!" Terek gave a bellow of rage. "I shall skewer this man Hamdi Gur Khan as I would a bit of mutton!"

He strode to the door. He hurried down the street, blade in hand. But Hirfa, running at his heels, said:

"No! Give me the sword!"

Terek was amazed.

"But—I thought—you wanted revenge."

"I do. I told Hamdi Gur Khan I would speak to you—and he laughed—he jeered."

"Eh?"

"He said it is easy for a weaponless man to attack one who has only two hands."

"He said that, did he?"

"Yes. He is waiting for you behind the mosque—is daring you to fight him with bare fists."

"Bare fists will do!" cried Terek, surrendering his sword to her. "Hai—hai—the sweet, wee sound the breaking of his neck will be when I wring it—as I would a bird's!"

He walked on. Hirfa by his side. The moon hid behind a cloud; and it was dark when he reached the mosque and when, passing in back of it, he came to a narrow, arched entrance that led to a nest of alleys—when he heard Hirfa had not cried:

"Ah—cowards, cowards! F[illegible]!"

John Vanderlyn's Adventure

by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes

What Has Gone Before:

JOHN VANDERLYN, a young American, is visiting at the villa of the Marchesa Trescobaldi, near Monte Carlo. The marchesa takes her guests, Col. Bruce, Joan Peveral, an English girl, and John, to an Arabian fortune teller down in the town. The Arab tells Vanderlyn that he is going to have an adventure with death and that he will not return to America until after he is married and his wife has borne him three children. On the road back to the marchesa's villa the guests come upon and rescue two women, victims of an auto wreck. The younger of the two is a Russian, Dina Hitrowo, and the other is her aunt, the Countess Gregorovitch. Vanderlyn is greatly attracted to the girl, but she leaves without bidding him goodby. He goes to Monte Carlo in search of his lost passport. He sees the girl playing roulette in the casino, and takes her and her aunt to dinner at a weird place known as "The Thieves' Kitchen." He finds his passport in his pocket, but cannot account for its reappearance. John proposes to Dina. She refuses him, explaining that, though she loves him, she cannot marry him. He arranges to take her away from the countess' house.

INSTALLMENT IX.

Robbery.

VANDERLYN lay wide awake, waiting for the dawn. As was his usual custom, he had left his windows wide open and the long silk curtains were drawn back.

It was with a kind of awe that he found himself welcoming as if with open heart and open arms the fruition of love. For the first time since he had met Dina Hitrowo he could tell himself that she, too, had experienced, if in a slighter, more tentative way, that which he now recognized had transformed everything that up to now had been what he called his life.

Since he had left the gambling room of the Villa Bellevue last night he had gone through every variety of strong emotion; and yet, instead of feeling exhausted, he had the sensation of having become an immortal, requiring neither food nor sleep.

At last he saw the pearly gleam of dawn creeping over the dark sea. He glanced at the luminous traveling clock which had been with him in God alone knew how many adventures. Its hands pointed to five o'clock.

Suddenly he heard untoward sounds—those of the opening and the shutting of a door giving on the terrace just beneath, or so it seemed, his bedroom. Who could be coming in or going out at this early hour?

He leaped out of bed and went across to the nearest window. In the early morning light he could see that one of the maids of Belle Colline, wearing the pretty lavender linen uniform which always amused and interested the marchesa's French friends, was walking on tiptoe across the marble pavement towards the balustrade.

The young woman was thin and tall, and in her right hand she held a suitcase. Vanderlyn told himself that she was off so early, maybe, to meet her husband, for most of the French servants, if not all, were married. On the other hand, she might be simply starting a day's holiday very early, as is the Provençal way.

He moved backwards and while doing so caught the edge of the French window and caused it to swing back noisily.

The woman walking across the terrace below stopped and instinctively turned round and threw up her head to see what had caused the curious sound above.

And then, all at once, with a flash of incredulous amazement, John Vanderlyn realized that the person he had supposed to be one of the many maids employed at Belle Colline was the Countess Gregorovitch's curious looking servant. She, that is, who had opened the door to him when he had gone down to the Villa Bella Mare for the first time, and who, after he had bestowed on her fifty francs, had accompanied him to the gate of the property!

Though she looked utterly different in her present trim, smart uniform, to what she had looked as a slatternly bonne à tout faire, he could not mistake her peculiarly long, bony face piercing black eyes, and penciled Chinese looking eyebrows.

He was amused and—it may have been his Puritan conscience—a little shocked. One of the marchesa's maids had evidently lent her one of the Belle Colline lavender linen uniforms in order that she might creep in and out unnoticed, to spend the night with one of the good looking footmen. Then Vanderlyn felt ashamed of his suspicions. After all, the woman might well be the wife of one of the men members of the large household and, if so, why shouldn't she, now and again, make the toilsome journey up what was almost a mountain side? The physical as well as the mental activity of the French never ceased to surprise him and provoke his admiration.

After a few moments he moved a little nearer again to the window. The woman was now creeping along, very, very softly; indeed, making no sound at all on the marble pavement of the terrace. Was she going down the broad Jacob's ladder which was situated a little way to the right?

All at once she stayed her steps and, after a moment of hesitation, she swung round abruptly to her left. When she reached the balustrade she hoisted herself up on to it and suddenly disappeared! Vanderlyn was aware that there was a sheer drop of something like ten feet on the other side of the terrace. But the earth there was quite soft, and no doubt an active, agile young woman could reach the road beneath quite as quickly, if not more quickly, that way than by going down the long, steep marble stairs.

Going back, although reluctantly, to bed, he fell asleep at last in what had now become broad daylight.

The Missing Jewels

Two hours later he awoke to hear a sudden cry and, through the locked door which separated his room from that of Lord Mansfield, he heard the words, "Jim! Jim! Do wake up! My jewels have been stolen in the night. O dear, O dear—what shall I do!"

Now, Lady Mansfield always called her lord and tyrant "James" in public. It sounded strange to hear her addressing him as Jim.

There came a cross, sleepy growl back. "What's that you say? Time to get up?"

"No, no, Jim! I don't know what time it is. All I know is that all my jewels have gone!"

And then Vanderlyn heard the sound made by a heavy man getting out of his bed, followed by the angry words: "Gone? What d'you mean, Ada? Didn't you put them in your safe when we came back from that show last night?"

"I didn't wear any of my jewels. You wouldn't let me. Don't you remember? I expect they were stolen while we were at the party."

"But didn't you put them away before you dressed for that damn show?"

"I think I did. I—I can't remember."

"You are a damned fool! I should have thought that at your age you would at least have learned to put your jewels away."

Then came sobbing, murmured words of excuse, of explanation, and again the man's hectoring, bullying voice, "Insured? Don't ride away on that, my girl! I'll have to stick to the insurance money. Things are a bit tight with me just now, and likely to remain so. What were they insured for?"

Vanderlyn did not hear the answer. But he did hear Lord Mansfield's full throated, "That's a bit of all right! On our way home, if they're not recovered, that is, I'll give you fifty thousand francs to play with in Paris. You'll be able to get enough sham gewgaws with that to make you look lovely to the end of your life!"

Lady Mansfield had evidently by now come right into her husband's room, for the unwilling eavesdropper heard her exclaim, in a trembling yet defiant voice, "We may get them all back!"

"That's likely—isn't it? What a fool I was to let you bring them here! You remember what that shrewd chap, Preston Jones, said about the Riviera?"

"I should have thought anything would have been safe here."

"Why here?"

"The marchesa herself has wonderful jewels."

"All the more reason to tempt burglars to come here. I expect they're all gone, too. Sometimes, Ada, I think you're a halfwit! However, I'd better get up and try and get hold of that chap Col. Bruce. I suppose the nearest police station is at Cannes."

An Extraordinary Sight

Vanderlyn only felt mildly excited. Lady Mansfield's jewels stolen? Well, in spite of her husband's remark as to things being a bit tight with him, she and he could afford such a loss better than most people. So the American told himself as he tried to go to sleep again. But, as is so often the way, the fact that he had just had a couple of hours' good sleep had made him more, rather than less, tired. He had scarcely laid his head back on the pillow before there burst out in the corridor outside his door a confused babel of French and English voices.

"Best call the colonel!" "Mais c'est abominable, ca!" And a woman's mincing voice cried out in English, "Do stanch the poor thing's blood—some one?" And a scoffing remark rose on the air, "She's not bleeding, you silly girl! You're frightening her, that's what you're doing—talking about blood. She'll be dead from fright in a minute if you don't look out. You go off back to your rooms—all you women. The colonel will be here in two ticks."

Vanderlyn leaped out of bed and opened the door of his room, to be met with an extraordinary sight indeed. It was as if every member of the great household—the marchesa had over twenty indoor servants—were gathered together in the corridor, some of the women in anything but their usual decent and attractive attire!

They were all, both men and maids, standing round a girl who leaned back as if in a fainting condition, supported by two stalwart English footmen. Her dressing gown was open and Vanderlyn with horror saw that there was a round singed hole in that part of her nightdress which covered her breast.

The American had had too much war experience not to know that she had been shot at very short range.

At the sight of him standing at the open door of his room there came a sudden hush. And then, a moment later, the crowd divided itself respectfully to make way for Col. Bruce. He was hastening along and, though only wearing a long, plain gray dressing gown, he looked just as he always looked—quiet, collected, and on the spot.

He gazed in distress at the pretty young woman who had been shot, and then cast a searching, stern glance round the men servants who stood in a semicircle before him. "Good God! Who did this?" he exclaimed. But there was conscious innocence on each one of the faces on which he turned that searching, stern, questioning look. Then he asked, "Who is this poor girl? Surely she is not one of her excellency's maids?"

It was the butler who spoke first: "This is Miss Pridgett, Lady Mansfield's personal maid, sir. A burglar must have been slipping out of her window early this morning, when she woke up and screamed. Unluckily for her she's a brave girl, and she jumped out of bed and made for him! Well? You see for yourself what that brought about, colonel? He shot at her point blank—that's what the villain did. Then she must have fainted dead away for she lay there over near her window, in a pool of her own blood, till she was found by Lady Mansfield just now. Her ladyship's jewels have all gone! They was what the rascal was after—of course."

Col. Bruce looked round, "Where is Lady Mansfield?" he asked.

"She went back into her room a few minutes ago, and I believe she's dressing, sir. We thought it better not to disturb her excellency till you'd heard what's happened."

"I suppose some one's telephoned for a doctor?"

A Door Bursts Open

The man answered at once, "O, yes, sir! Within five minutes of hearing the 'orrible scream her ladyship gave when she found Miss Pridgett in that condition, I managed to get through to Dr. Dennis at Cannes. It's easy to get through at this time of the morning, and he's comin here as quick as he can."

"I think Miss Pridgett ought to be put to bed and kept as quiet as possible. She certainly oughtn't to be kept standing out here in the corridor."

At once a procession formed itself and the poor girl was more or less carried back to her own room at the extreme end of the wide passage.

Col. Bruce drew the butler to one side, close, indeed, to where Vanderlyn was standing. "Did you also telephone to the police?" he asked.

The man answered in a low voice, "Well, no, colonel! I thought it better to wait till you gave me instructions."

He added apologetically, "There hasn't been much of a delay. Shall I put a call through now?"

"No. Don't do that yet. I think we ought to ask her excellency what she thinks should be done."

And then a bedroom door burst open and Lord Mansfield's robust form appeared. He was clad in a gorgeous dressing gown composed of valuable old Cashmir shawls and trimmed with sable. "I say, colonel? It's a pretty bad thing that's happened!" he exclaimed.

"Yes, indeed, a terrible thing."

"I should say it was terrible. My wife's pearls were bought by me in the year '16 for eighteen thousand pounds. They're worth double that now! And that isn't all! I bought a marvelous string of engraved emeralds the other day and they are not yet insured!"

Col. Bruce looked at the speaker coldly. "I was not thinking of the loss of Lady Mansfield's jewels, regrettable as that is. I was thinking of the terrible attack made on her maid. The poor girl was shot at point blank."

"Aye, aye, that was bad, too—very bad! It shows that those foreign chaps will stick at nothing, not even murder. But Pridgett's in no danger—or so Joan Peveral has just told my wife. It's a clean wound and will soon heal. But the loss of Lady Mansfield's jewels is a very serious matter indeed. I hope the first thing done was to telephone to the police?"

Col. Bruce again gave a cold look at the speaker. "I believe the first telephone call was to a doctor," he said deliberately.

"But they've telephoned for the police now, surely?"

And then Vanderlyn felt a mixture of amusement and satisfaction, for Col. Bruce, generally the most truthful of men, said evasively, "Unfortunately, it takes a most extraordinary time getting through, even to Cannes."

"That's true, worse luck! Why, I was two hours getting on to that banker chap in Monte Carlo the other day!"

Col. Bruce said thoughtfully, "I think it would be quicker in the end if one of us went to Cannes and explained everything that's happened to the head of the police there." He glanced at the American. "I wonder if you'd mind going, as your French is so good, Vanderlyn?"

"Of course I'll go!" Vanderlyn turned to Lord Mansfield, "I'd better go armed with a complete list of Lady Mansfield's stolen jewels; also as close a description as the unfortunate maid can manage to give of her assailant. The French police are extremely good at their job when they have all the facts in hand; but they're apt to be what I think you call"—he turned to Col. Bruce—"'a bit sticky' unless one's quite frank with them. In this case I'm afraid, in fact, it's certain, that the burglar or burglars will have tried to get across the frontier into Italy."

"I'm not so sure of that," observed Col. Bruce. "The last big robbery that took place on the Riviera was done by a gang who lived in a charming villa in Cannes. They wisely never made any immediate effort to dispose of their booty; and it was only by a series of lucky accidents that they were caught at last."

As Lord Mansfield began disappearing into his own room he called out, "I think I'll get up now, at once; though I confess I feel pretty cheap, what with our night out and what with what's happened this morning!"

The American was about to follow his example when Col. Bruce touched him on the arm, "I wonder if you'd mind coming this way for a minute, Vanderlyn? As a matter of fact, I'd like you to come up into my room for a few moments. If I go into your quarters, Mansfield will overhear every word we say, if he cares to do so."

Both men turned and quickly walked down the corridor. Then, to Vanderlyn's surprise, they went up a winding corkscrew staircase which led into an austerely furnished round bedchamber, forming the top of the tower which stood sentinel-wise at the extreme right of the château.

The colonel closed the door, and then, "I'm very anxious," he said earnestly, "that the police shall be induced to believe what I know to be God's truth—that no member of the marchesa's household had any part or share in this foul business."

Vanderlyn said heartily, "I'm sure you're right!"

"It would be very painful for her"—Col. Bruce was speaking with some emotion now—"if the police came here and insisted on searching all the servants' rooms and boxes, making each one of them go through a kind of third degree. Every one of the men and women in her service has been with the marchesa for years. As for those who come in from outside, to help in the kitchens and so on, they, also, come to Belle Colline year after year and we know everything about each of them."

"I'll do my best to persuade the commissaire of police that the robbery was not done by any one connected with the château," said Vanderlyn eagerly, "and I suppose the quicker I get to Cannes the better, eh?"

"Of course! All the same, the most sensible thing you can do after dressing is to go downstairs and have a good breakfast. They may keep you hanging about for hours at the police headquarters."

ILLUSTRATION BY W. H. WISNER.

They were all, both men and maids, standing around a girl who leaned back as if in a fainting condition, supported by two stalwart English footmen.

That Cool Voice

By the time Vanderlyn had dressed and gone downstairs the Marchesa Trescobaldi was already out on the terrace looking very anxious and troubled.

"I understand you want Lady Mansfield to give you a list of the stolen jewels, Mr. Vanderlyn? She's terribly upset, so I've persuaded her to stay quietly in bed. But she's eager to see you, and give you any information which you may find useful when telling the police what happened here last night."

Then she lowered her voice, "I'm afraid Lord Mansfield isn't always very kind to poor Lady Mansfield. He was very horrid to her just now in front of me, and that though all her own jewels were fully insured—and, from what she tells me, for an enormous sum."

And then they both started, for a cool voice exclaimed just behind them, "I hope that horrid pompous man will give his poor wife some of the insurance money. I shouldn't be a bit surprised if he sticks to it all, and makes her buy what the French call toc with about a thousandth part of it!"

Vanderlyn laughed aloud. He wouldn't have credited Joan Peveral with half as much knowledge of human nature as she had just betrayed; and he looked with kinder eyes than usual at the tall slight figure silhouetted against the now deep blue sky.

As usual, Joan was faultlessly dressed, this morning in a pale blue flannel suit. Now that he knew she had nursed in a big field hospital toward the end of the war, he felt more kindly toward her; yet she must be, he reflected, a good deal older than he had thought at first. Even in this bright morning light she looked astonishingly young.

The marchesa said uneasily, "I think Col. Bruce has told you how anxious I am that none of my servants should be brought into the matter?"

Vanderlyn nodded, "I don't know that I shall be able to prevent a certain amount of unpleasantness," he said quietly, "for, as you know, the police all over the world always suspect the indoor servants in any house where a robbery has been committed. Still, the Cannes commissaire of police may be more intelligent than most of his colleagues."

Mournful Humor

In spite of the colonel's advice, Vanderlyn ate but a Spartan breakfast, and as he got up he exclaimed, "I wonder if I could see Lady Mansfield now?"

"I'll take you up to her!" cried Joan Peveral. And then she smiled, a not overkind smile. "I've been that poor soul's one comfort and stay this morning. When Lord Mansfield started bullying her, I just gave him one look—and he stopped dead. How I'd like to tame that man! If anything happens to her ladyship I think I'll have a try for him. Wouldn't I make his ill earned money fly!"

"You would indeed, my dear," said Bertie Langford softly. He had just come down, looking in his own way just as sleekly perfect in his attire as was his ladylove. "We must hope for the poor chap's sake that his wife will soon be in better health than she is at present," he concluded slyly.

As Vanderlyn followed Joan Peveral up the central staircase of the château, the girl said musingly, "I wonder the marchesa's own jewels weren't touched, don't you? She'd left them all out, too, last night! I mean she didn't put them away before going to bed. That emerald ring of hers must be worth a lot of money. But, of course, the burglar may have been disturbed before he got to her room."

By now they had reached Lady Mansfield's bedroom door, and the girl called out, "May we come in?"

Then opening the door, "I've brought up Mr. Vanderlyn to see you," she said cheerfully. "He's going into Cannes to see the police and he wants an exact description and list of your jewels to take with him."

Lady Mansfield was sitting up in bed. She looked as she always did look, unnaturally neat and tidy. Her hair had already been dressed in its usual serpentine coils, and she wore a bedjacket elaborately trimmed with lace and ribbon embroidery. She appeared, poor woman, even more faded and tired in bed than out of it.

"I'll do my best to tell you what's gone," she said wearily. "But I had a great many things with me that I hardly ever wear."

With a touch of resentment she added, "It's horrid of James to say that he didn't want me to bring my jewels abroad. He was quite keen I should do so, because we're going on to Rome to stay with that Prince Corlonia to whom he was nice during the war. The prince is going to give a ball—just for us. That was why James even made me bring my tiara. And it was so stupid, as they're no longer worn by smart women."

With a touch of mournful humor she added, "Perhaps that is why the burglar left that behind him."

"Left your tiara?" repeated Vanderlyn in a surprised tone. "Yes, it's over there. In that big brown case on the side table."

"May I look at it?" he asked quietly, and, getting up, he went over to an ivory inlaid table on which stood a large round leather jewel case.

Pressing the knob he lifted back the upper part or lid a few inches. Yes, there sparkled a large diamond tiara embedded in cream velvet.

"Do show it me!" exclaimed Joan Peveral.

Taking up the case, he turned the lid right back, and then Lady Mansfield gave a cry of horror.

"O, Mr. Vanderlyn, my big diamond is gone!"

Sure enough, a strong and skillful hand had wrenched out of its setting, at the apex of the crownlike ornament, what must have been a very large gem.

"O, dear! O, dear! How stupid of Jim not to open the case properly this morning. He only half opened it, just as you did just now, Mr. Vanderlyn. That diamond—the one that's gone—was worth two thousand pounds. And I'm afraid my tiara was the one thing of mine not insured. I hardly ever wore it, for in England it's kept in the bank."

"If I were you," observed Joan coolly, "I shouldn't tell Lord Mansfield anything about that stone being missing. After all, your rope of pearls is the really valuable thing of yours that's disappeared, and your pearls were fully insured. Of course, it's a pity the engraved emeralds went, too—they can never be replaced."

The Mystery Woman

A few minutes later Vanderlyn left Lady Mansfield's room with a full list and description of the jewels which had been stolen. They were all valuable, and they all had increased in value since they had been bought and, what angered Lord Mansfield, since they had been insured.

As Joan Peveral and her fellow guest walked downstairs on their way to the hall outside which the American's car was waiting for him, she said suddenly, "I want to tell you something, John, that I feel you ought to know. But it must be an absolute secret between us! I'd rather Lord Mansfield lost all his money than cause five minutes' worry or trouble to our darling marchesa!"

"Same here," he said, smiling. "But what is it I ought to know?"

"I think you ought to know that I saw a housemaid I had never seen before—a tall, queer looking woman—go into Lady Mansfield's room after she had left it last evening. Also, I noticed something very peculiar about this servant."

He stayed his steps. "What was that?" he asked.

"She was carrying a large bag or suitcase in her hand. I thought that very odd, for I naturally supposed she had come to do the room. She was, of course, wearing the uniform all the maids wear here."

Vanderlyn remained silent. The English girl's confidence had let in a flood of light on the mystery. He recalled with startling clearness what he had seen that early morning when he had looked out of his window. The swiftly moving figure clad in the lilac linen uniform had held in her hand a suitcase. He was convinced that the vile woman who was the trusted servant of the old Russian noblewoman, and whom she used as a spy on her niece, had managed to borrow or steal one of the Belle Colline uniforms and, after having stolen Lady Mansfield's jewels while her male accomplice stood on watch, had hidden herself with him till the early morning.

It was the man, of course, who had shot, and by a miracle only just escaped killing Lady Mansfield's lady's maid. But it was probably the woman who had actually taken the booty out of the château in the suitcase he had seen in her hand.

His rueful reflections were broken across by the girl now walking quickly by his side: "You agree," she whispered, "that it's far better to say nothing now to Col. Bruce or to the marchesa, John? The marchesa is such an angel—they all adore her so, for she's awfully good to them—that even that dishonest servant felt she must spare her! It's as plain as a pikestaff that there is a gang of them, and that the woman played her part for love of one of the burglars!"

"I quite agree," said Vanderlyn firmly, "that nothing should be said to Col. Bruce or the marchesa—yet. After all, it's just possible that the young woman you saw going into Lady Mansfield's room was not the thief at all, Miss Peveral. She may have been carrying a suitcase for a quite innocent purpose. One should never forget in an affair of this sort, the long arm of coincidence."

"I hope you are right," said Joan sincerely. "I should hate to think that any member of the household in the château had a hand in the burglary."

On to Cannes

As Vanderlyn drove, swiftly, steadily, along the Corniche road leading to Cannes he lived over again the curious incident which he felt was now explained.

Once more he recalled the look of startled fear which had filled the face of the tall, thin woman who had suddenly thrown up her head when she had heard the sound of his window swinging back. He seemed to see before him her cruel and sinister face. Indeed, her evil look had explained to him, in a measure, the terror Dina had betrayed when she thought the woman had overheard that harmless conversation in the gloomy shuttered sitting room of the Villa Bella Mare, Vanderlyn often thought of that long, bare salon which overlooked the solitary strip of Mediterranean beach shut in between the high sea walls which had been built by Napoleonic smugglers a hundred years ago.

As he came within sight of Cannes he began asking himself, with a great deal of anxiety and discomfort, what, in the peculiar circumstances, he had better do?

The Quirks of a Wild Girl's Heart

By Achmed Abdullah

as there the dim figure of a man and heard Hamdi Gur Khan's voice:

"Is that you, Terek?"

"None else, O dead man!"

Terek launched out with his fist. The other receded. He ran rapidly into the black nest of alleys, while Terek hurried after him, yelling:

"Stand up and fight, O coward!"

Then, suddenly, too late, he understood that here was ambush, here was conspiracy grim and tragic, here was trap baited by his own love and Hirfa's treachery—as, all at once, from everywhere the tribesmen came rushing, bearing down upon him with cudgels and stones, belaboring him, shouting:

"Take this because you kissed my wife!"

"And this because you embraced my sister!"

"And this because you drank my last wine!"

"And this one for your nose—because I do not like its shape!"

Fifty Against One

Terek did all that a stout man could, egged by so great a host. Planting himself against a wall, he used fists and feet and teeth, exclaiming that—by Allah!—it was himself was the lad to like long odds in love and strife.

Odds, though, too long.

They surged about him like hounds pulling down a stag. There was a confused moment of snorting and tussling and pushing and kicking; and it must have been the bitter night of fate for Terek Haydar if not just then—now, let us repeat, there were the strange quirks of a wild girl's heart—Zeila had not cried:

"To—wards, cowards! Fifty against one!"

And with the moon at that moment coming from behind the cloud bank, Terek, looking up, saw her lift his sword. She tossed it over to him with all her young strength. It cut through the air like a streak of silver. He caught it—and out at the others with a clatter of iron—a great bellow:

"Come on, O sons of dogs! Wah—come on and be stabbed, cut, spitted, entirely killed, O most ignoble and dirt fed hyenas!"

Years later Terek was heard to remark that far indeed had he wandered on the soles of his two feet, warring his own and other men's wars for the sport of it; but that the fight on that night was one the memory of which he would hug to his heart as a maiden hugs her first lover.

"One against fifty! Yes! But I had my sword! And there was Hirfa urging me on!"

For that's what she did.

"Power to your arm!" she shrilled. "Power to your arm, O hero!"

And power to his arm it was—and strength to his wrist—and his blade dancing a swishy, triumphant saraband—and, presently, the tribesmen running away, shrieking for mercy—and, after a while, nobody left except a man and a woman.

"If you should love me the least little bit," began the man.

"I have loved you, dear, since the day we met," said the woman. "Ah"—speaking the truth as she saw it—"my love was never farther away from you than the width of a passing thought."

They were silent.

Then Terek laughed.

"Tomorrow," he told her, "we shall ask the priest to make us man and wife. And then we shall ride away into the south—helping ourselves to two fine horses—perhaps three, because of the grand loot which we shall take away."

And he kissed her.

Imagine! Cod-liver oil in a form that children actually like to take

"I CERTAINLY will let my son try Scott's Emulsion of Cod-Liver Oil," said Mrs. C. P. Grassmuck, when the Scott's Emulsion reporter called at her home, 509 Wynnwood Rd., Merion, Pa. "Goodness knows I have my troubles getting him to take plain cod-liver oil. 'Chet' just hates it."

'Chet,' the smiling lad pictured above, took a spoonful . . .

"Boy! I like Scott's Emulsion—it is good!" he grinned. And right then Mrs. Grassmuck knew that problem was solved.

Pleasanter to take—but that isn't all!

Pale, thin, run-down children need cod-liver oil. Give it the pleasantest way—give Scott's Emulsion.

It hasn't that strong "fishy" taste. It doesn't upset even delicate stomachs. It brings you purest Norwegian cod-liver oil in its pleasantest form—a perfect emulsion. Easier to take—easier to digest.

Scott's Emulsion is rich in vitamin A, the growth-promoting vitamin that helps guard against disease. It is rich in vitamin D, the sunshine-vitamin that prevents rickets. It also contains vital mineral elements that aid in forming sound bones and teeth. This gives Scott's Emulsion a special advantage for growing children, infants, nursing and expectant mothers. Get Scott's Emulsion of Cod-Liver Oil at your druggist's. Watch cheeks grow rosy. See youngsters gain new weight and pep.

GOOD Morning!

I almost said "Merry Christmas!" Can you BELIEVE that the holiday season's here? It seems to me only about yesterday that I was saying things no lady SHOULD say about the heat!

November was a pretty good month for us cinema-goers. I'm willing to bet you liked all the pictures listed above and, probably, quite a few more.

"JUNO AND THE PAYCOCK" was a "darlin'"! "Glorious comedy, this," said your movie cricket, "with an innocent bell of pathos tolling through it. A picture that catches the fancy at the outset and holds the interest not till the final curtain! Of laughs it has a legion and the tears it calls forth are warm, spontaneous and satisfying. It is Sean O'Casey's fine stage play, acted on the screen by an excellent cast containing a number of the original Abbey players featured in the 'legitimate' production . . . it is an anomaly, alive with the spirit of caricature. There's burlesque in its comedy, melodrama in its tragedy; but it is richly, shrewdly human, always—and so, it gets you where you live. . . . Perhaps, toward the end, the picture drags just a little, but this, I feel, I should hardly mention, when the production as a whole is the brave and beautiful, gay and gallant thing that it is."

"THE SILENT ENEMY" (silent) "is a marvelously photographed chronicle of the lives of the Ojibway Indians, and their battle with their silent enemy—hunger. The picture, dealing with the lives of these red men of some four hundred years ago, is acted entirely by Indians—and authentic. . . . In this production the 'love interest' isn't the big thing. The great adventure of a peace-loving tribe, fighting for life against a background of sheer and awful beauty, is what counts. . . . There are 200 Indians performing for you and never seeming TO perform. The camera has recorded events with sweeping and, at times, almost unbelievable beauty. . . . The caribou stampede at the finish is like nothing I ever saw before in my life. It took two years to make 'The Silent Enemy.' See it—and rejoice."

"HELL'S ANGELS" was started as a "silent" and then remade for the talkies. . . . "The air sequences—and there are many of them—are great, spectacular, wonderful, daring, exciting, thrillingly beautiful and, technically, amazingly informative. Some of the shots among the clouds are too real to visualize with comfort. You see war as war was when Von Richthofen's 'circus' met the allied ace and battled them in the air. I have never seen anything like the formation flying in this picture, nor, I think, have you. . . . There has never been anything to compare even faintly with the air stuff in 'Hell's Angels.' There are examples of physical daring that make you shudder. One camera man died of heart failure during the making of the film. . . . The tale has a brave and tragic finish. Our gratitude to Mr. Hughes (director) for omitting marshmallow sauce from the finale."

"UP THE RIVER" "depicts jail as jail would be if Punch were running it. . . . Maurine Watkins of Chicago' fame wrote the piece and I think she must have had a good time doing it. With gay disrespect she tickles the ribs of the various phases of prison life, such as welfare work, entertainments, ball games and honor systems, making them twist and double up in the most ludicrous contortions. . . . The casting is splendid. . . . Don't let the fact that 'Up the River' has no big names keep you from seeing the picture, for, no two ways about it, this satiric comedy with more than borders on burlesque, is one of the most enjoyable productions the year has brought forth."

"THE LIFE OF THE PARTY," featuring Winnie Lightner and bringing Charles Butterworth, the droll chap who does so much for "Sweet Adeline," to the screen, was a scream. It was all in technicolor and Mr. Butterworth is seen as a famous horse-trainer from Kentucky who encounters a lot of Broadway gold diggers in Hawaii. Seddi, "My enthusiasm for the genius Mr. Butterworth may be said to know no bounds. . . . The cast throughout is an excellent one, lots of the lines are clever, and direction is good."

"TOM SAWYER." "Children! Oswanpo! This picture is for YOU! You'll love it. . . . It's an adaptation, as of course you know, of Mark Twain's story, and is presented with charm, humor and sympathy. It marks the motion picture industry's first step in the direction of bringing children back into the cinema theaters, from which they have been kept by the talkies so many of which are for adults only.' . . . Director John Cromwell knows his Twain and his youngsters in the piece are as natural as monkeys and the picture contains most of the episodes that are best remembered when 'Tom Sawyer' is mentioned. . . . The film was built to please."

"NIAGARA FALLS" — Scenic. Was photographed by the 'natural vision' process, patented by George K. Spoor and P. John Berggen of Chicago, and was shown on a screen approximately twice as wide as the ordinary silver sheet. This process does away with the flat effect of ordinary photography, creating depth. . . . 'Niagara Falls' is revolutionary and wonderful. Some of the shots are so real, so vividly real, as to be almost unbelievable."

Black Face Fails to Darken Skill of Ethel Barrymore

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK. — [Special Correspondence.]—You could tell it was Ethel Barrymore when she swung into the first act of "Scarlet Sister Mary" by the twist of her shoulders and the slightly conscious tilt of her head. But if you were unfamiliar with these characteristics you never would have suspected it.

Blacked up, a Barrymore becomes as much a Smith or a Jones as any of us. When this Barrymore spoke, however, even though the voice was more hoarse than usual, you knew her for the daughter of the Drews that she is. When she spoke, too, Sister Mary took on a much greater importance than she really deserves as a heroine of drama.

Play Is Pretty Slim.

Lift Miss Barrymore out of the part and you take from the play even the slight claim to recognition it commands, for without her it becomes an essentially unimportant and fairly trivial recital of faith and romance among the Gullah blacks, with its appeal limited to that public sympathetically interested in the Gullahs. Which is to say that the art of narrative that won for Julia Peterkin the Pulitzer prize for her novel cannot be successfully transferred to the theater, where actions speak ever so much louder than words.

Still this most important first night of her recent career was something of a triumph for Ethel Barrymore. She had come to town doubtfully after weeks on the road that were gratifying financially, but not too encouraging artistically. She had weakened in Detroit and canceled matinées and night performances to save herself for the Broadway ordeal, and she knew the audience, although friendly, was fringed with those who rather expected her to fail, and professional reviewers about whom she had been quoted as saying mean things.

The audience continued friendly and the reviews, while none was rhapsodic, were fair and unbiased.

A Successful Debut.

The introduction of Ethel Barrymore Colt was also accomplished successfully. Daughter does not appear until the last act. Then she enters hesitantly as Seraphine, Sister Mary's second child. You might reasonably say that from the fourth row Ethel Jr. is more a Colt than a Barrymore; round of face, moderately stocky of build, a well poised subdeb missing the eager nervousness of her actor kin.

She was visibly excited under her black makeup, but, once through the reception, she went capably ahead with the scene. In the play, Sister Mary's Seraphine is begging her chance for happiness with a city lover. And Sister Mary, her own faith shaken and her distorted philosophy of life confused, still bids the girl go and extract such happiness as she can find from life.

Might have happened that way when Ethel Jr. asked to go on the stage. Might be that the actress mother, though inordinately proud of her family line, was still painfully conscious of a changing theater and bitter disappointments she would save her girl, if she could. Yet she had the sense and the courage to give the child her chance.

Follows Story Slavishly.

I think she need not worry. Ethel Jr. will have her try at the life she has heard discussed all her years, and probably tire of it. A little while, a few parts, a lot of hard work and she will be married and settled and that will be that.

"Scarlet Sister Mary," adapted for the stage by Daniel Reed, follows the story almost slavishly and repeats much of its dialogue. It tells of the young Negress' adventure with the lustful and lovable July; of their hurried wedding and the arrival of little Unexpected (played by a kicking pickaninny who won the audience immediately). It follows Mary's desertion by July, who runs away with the gal, Cinders; of her demand for freedom and her conclusion as to her maternal rights; of her numerous progeny and their numerous fathers; the death of Unexpected and the vision of heaven and understanding.

Miss Barrymore, playing with a defiant earnestness and an apparent belief in her chosen character, was intense and moving in most of her scenes; the appeal that is hers shone through makeup and play and reached the audience unmistakably.

Most of the other Gullahs are played by soft spoken British players—Maum Harris by Beatrice Terry; Ben, the cripple, by Horance Braham. Walter Gilbert is the July, William B. Mack the voodoo man.

Two New Comedies Appear.

A couple of promising fun plays appeared this week. "This Is New York" was the best of them. "Oh, Promise Me," a rowdy farce, second best.

"This Is New York" was written by the Robert Emmet Sherwood who did "The Road to Rome" and likewise "The Queen's Husband," a healthy satirist with respect for the verities. Taking as his theme the familiar defiance of the hinterland visitor, "New York is a nice place to visit, but I wouldn't live there if you gave me the place," Mr. Sherwood brings a pompous prairie politician from one of the Dakotas and embroils him, through his daughter, in a typical Broadway love nest scandal.

Senator Krull is the type of westerner who would, he tells the press, be greatly relieved if New York should HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—[Special.]—Things are so involved. Gene Markey, the young man Ina Claire left in the lurch when she up and married [that's accurate: She and Jack Gilbert went to Nevada by plane, you remember], is now being seen about with Gloria Swanson.

People are wondering whether Constance Bennett will really marry the Marquise de la Falaise and all the rest of it, or whether she is on her way after some other scalp. Her blonde sister, Joan, and John Considine, Fox official, have had another spat, and this one is rumored to be final. The engagement of John McCormick, ex-husband of Colleen Moore, to Mae Clarke is something of a surprise to those who were saying that Colleen and John were getting ready to make up and go back to housekeeping again.

There Are Still Friendships.

To those cynics who believe that friendship is no more, there is this story to tell: All the gang who worked together on "All Quiet" a year ago were great pals, and worshiped Lewis Milestone, their director. Now that he is just back from a trip to Europe, the boys, that is, Lew Ayres, Russell Gleason, Billy Bakewell, George Duryea, and Louis Wolheim, are giving a big dinner for him. They are planning a lot of fun and intend giving another affair for him at Christmas time, and with a great big present.

Last year, when some of these boys had not reached fame and were still struggling in the mud of the studio trenches, Milestone remembered them

Critic Finds Why Folks Go to the Movies

By Tom Pettey.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—While most of the other "serious thinkers" of Times square were sitting around drinking highballs and waiting for the return of light wines and beer, this column got out its overshoes and its last Christmas muffler and set about finding out why certain people go to certain movies. A direct approach, a question and then on to the next victim was the method pursued. The findings, while they lack the authority of a government census and even fall somewhat short of a Literary Digest poll so far as scope is concerned, were illuminating.

It developed that a majority of those questioned went to see "Moby Dick" not because of John Barrymore, but to see the whale; that the destruction of a dirigible and not Jean Harlow lured them past half a dozen yawning talkie maws and into "Hell's Angels"; that "Whoopee's" attraction came from Ziegfeld's last record and not Cantor's; that Jesse Crawford and his organ brought them to the Paramount theater box office regardless of what particular Paramount star was strutting on the screen; that they went to see "War Nurse" because the critics had panned it.

More and More Reasons.

One subject boasted that he always went to a Nancy Carroll picture because he used to know her husband; another selected his pictures by whether or not the house showed Graham McNamee news reels and a third passed up Roxy's for the Paramount because the Paramount has a ping pong table in the "college room." Several others had checked Paramount off the list for the same reason.

Not all of those questioned had such decided opinions and a considerable number were at a loss to explain why they went to the movies at all.

"It's like this," confessed a clerk in one of those stores where they sell you a pack of cigarets and you have to beg for the matches. "The wife says, 'How about a show tonight?' And I feel in my pockets and say, 'Movie?' And she says, 'W-e-l-l, I guess so!' Then we start down Broadway and I ask those fellows with the megaphone out on the sidewalk if there are any seats and they always say, 'Thirty minute wait downstairs; seats in the upper balcony only.' And we keep on walking and finally come back to the first place and get in a line and go to the second show. The wife always knows what is on the program. I don't."

Some Get Serious.

There were some among the subjects who took their movie going seriously, read the advertisements, followed favorite critics and knew most of the stars—male and female—but they wanted to talk about the relative value of this picture over that and the camera possibilities or Mr. Whoozit and Miss So-and-So, all of which caused this column to swish away through the rain.

Totaled up, it appears that the segment of humanity interviewed on its movie going habits by this observer goes to the most convenient theater regardless of the attraction offered and only wanders afield when pushed by some individual complex or attracted by some outstanding incident in the film which seldom has to do with the star's personal attractions. Exceptions noted included the personal drawing power of Buster Keaton, Will Rogers and Norma Shearer.

And now for some gossip. Samuel Goldwyn came to town the other day and Louis Bromfield, the author, left about the same time for Europe. They tell a story about Goldwyn and Bromfield at Hollywood. The Pulitzer prize winner had been shipped to the coast by Goldwyn and sat around for six weeks without being asked to do anything. Finally Bromfield queried: "Why am I here?" One of the officials thought for a minute and replied: "O, you don't have to write anything, Goldwyn hired you for your name."

Mr. Bromfield Just "Hired."

The above may or may not be strictly correct, but the following is hole proof, for the writer was present. Goldwyn had just hired Bromfield and the author was shipping out that night. This observer was calling at the Goldwyn office on command.

"Mr. Bromfield has joined our writing staff," said the producer, "and is going to do original stories for us. I have been very greatly impressed by his work."

"What did you like best?" the producer was asked.

"Well, now what was it?" reflected the little big picture man, and he called in two of his aids. Everybody, including this writer, pondered and did mental labor, the files were resorted to, and memories were racked, but none of Mr. Bromfield's impressive passages were brought to light. "Well, just say that we hired him," compromised the producer.

Do you want to make a personal test of the acting ability of the average talkie star? All right, this is what some of the "I wouldn't believe it if I saw it folks" here are doing just for fun. Stuff your ears with cotton—stuff 'em good. Then go to a perfectly strange movie and see if you can follow the sequence without sound. You'll get a surprise.

Notes of Movie Stars.

Some serious notes on our movie celebrities: Richard Cromwell, young star of "Tol'able David," wears green suspenders and wants a rôle in one of Barrie's plays. Richard Barthelmess crooks his little finger when he drinks tea. Greta Garbo carries a neatly wrapped bundle whenever she attends a social function. It contains a pair of house slippers and she changes into them before she goes in to dinner. Myrna Loy rates a flag in front of her hotel when she visits New York. Joan Crawford can make hooked rugs. Mary Pickford makes fudge. The perfect figure—feminine or otherwise—in pictures is about thirty-six—thirty-six thousand a week. "Zwei Herzen" is a German film. Marlene Dietrich is a new actress and that's all this week.

World Premiere of "Camille" on Wednesday

Mary Garden in Title Role of Forrest Opera.

By Edward Moore.

AFTER a full year or more of preparation the Civic Opera company will put on a world premiere next Wednesday night. It is "Camille," founded upon the Dumas novel, "La Dame aux Camelias," with words and music by Hamilton Forrest of Chicago, and, that all the operatic conventions may be preserved as nearly intact as possible, to be sung in French.

Mary Garden is to sing and act the part of Marguerite, Charles Hackett that of Armand, and Chase Baromeo that of the elder Duval. In addition there will be characters described here and there as friends, lovers, courtesans, and elderly adorers, to be taken by Maria Claessens, Coe Glade, Theodore Ritch, Barre Hill, Antonio Nicolich, Alice d'Hermanoy, Octave Dua, Helen Freund, Giuseppe Cavadore, and J. Dansereau. Emil Cooper will conduct and Dr. Otto Erhardt will direct the production.

The first thought is that "Camille" by its very nature has put up some difficulties for itself. The story is pretty well covered from an operatic standpoint by "La Traviata," and "La Traviata" rates, or used to rate, among the three most popular works in the répertoire of the Civic Opera company.

But we are assured that this will be a vastly different thing. "The opera has been modernized both in score and libretto," says the advance notice, "jazz tunes at nocturnal parties being freely mixed with plain speaking." At this point an association of ideas begins to develop as to whether this was not the reason of translating the libretto into French.

No answer can be given until next Wednesday night is over. The opera company has been maintaining profound silence over what the words and music are going to sound like. There are a few words regarding promised novelties in stage setting, one of them being a huge book of "Camille" whose covers open upon the changes of three scenes in the first act.

Composer a Chicagoan.

Mr. Forrest was born and raised in Chicago and has written several works here, not, however, of the magnitude of Wednesday night's premiere. Among other revelations from the publicity department, it is said that the characters of the opera retain the names and traits that Dumas gave them, though with a few added details of Mr. Forrest's own devising.

Armand, the young man of good family, is introduced to Marguerite Gautier, who, on the authority of Fannie Brice, has been a bad woman but good company. He is solicitous and devoted, and her heart is touched.

When they have been living together for a time, his father comes to plead with Marguerite to break off the liaison so that Armand's sister may contract a marriage untouched by scandal. So far the piece follows "La Traviata" with some accuracy of outline. But in order to cure him of his infatuation, Marguerite feels obliged to enact a love scene with the father where Armand may see them.

This incident would seem to have been Mr. Forrest's own idea. In advance and on its face it sounds a bit psychopathic. But in the last act Armand learns the truth and Marguerite expires in an atmosphere of forgiveness and tuberculosis. So the story returns to the normal again. But since it is to be so extensively modernized a good setting for the final

Charm Returns to Stage with Play by Milne

One of Burns Mantle's Ten Best Plays.

By Charles Collins.

SENTIMENTAL and charming are well-worn adjectives, but they can be used without remorse to describe "Michael and Mary," which the Dramatic League of Chicago has brought into the Harris theater. This comedy by the whimsical—sometimes too whimsical—Mr. Milne, who seems to be bent upon becoming a modern Barrie, is a graceful and winsome piece of play-writing which successfully challenges the cynical fashions of the era.

It deals with the ideals of the generation that was young when King Edward succeeded Queen Victoria—such echoes of the past as love at first sight, and lifelong loyalty, and the romantic fantasies of the sense of honor. It is a challenge to many of the points of view that pass as modernism in the theater; and yet no one will dare to sneer at it as "old fashioned." In fact, "Michael and Mary" is a novelty for playgoers; its course runs out of the groove of 1930 standards. It deals, in short, with characters who possess ideals, and who live with them thoughtfully, bravely, and successfully.

This is a light little play that makes no pretense of purpose, strikes no attitudes, undertakes nothing except to tell its diverting and appealing story. But there is meat in it for meditation. Two scenes I especially recommend to social philosophers: the episode between Michael, who was a bit of a rebel in 1905, and his father, a Church of England clergyman, in the first act; and the conversation between the settled and prosperous Michael of 1929 and his own young cub, just out of college. The eternal story of the conflict between cantankerous youth and sober fatherhood was never told more wisely and happily.

The acting and staging of this play are up to Theater Guild standards, which, represent, I believe, the ambitions of the Dramatic League. If "Michael and Mary" had been done by the Guild, instead of by Charles Hopkins in his small capacity theater in New York, the results would have been about like this interpretation. Mr. Milne's comedies, in the past, have won the approval of the Guild's board of governors—witness "Mr. Pim Passes By" and "Ariadne," in that organization's catalogue of titles. The subscribers to the Dramatic League's season have no reason to complain about their investment.

Discovered: Mr. Neill.

Madge Kennedy plays the heroine of "Michael and Mary" like a true little artist in the depiction of girls who were not born to be flappers. Terence Neill, whose past performances are not yet in the easily available records, is making a reputation for himself in the rôle of Michael and also for the casting director who put him there. Boston saw him first, as a successor to Henry Hull of the New York run, and announced a discovery; Chicago has followed suit; and Broadway should give an attentive ear to the praise that is pursuing this admirable leading man.

Miss Kennedy's appearances here have been infrequent, and Mr. Neill is apparently just off the boat. But there are old Chicago friends in this "Michael and Mary" cast. There was a time when George Alison, acting the best Anglican padre that British comedy has given us for years, was the idol of a stock company at the Bush Temple theater. Gertrude Rivers Alison, who appears as the chatty and wholesome lodging house matron, Mrs. Tullivant, also came in for her share of the affection of the North Side. That was twenty-five years ago, but there must be many good housewives in the Forty-third ward who still think fondly of George Alison.

Leontovich on Broadway.

Eugenie Leontovich was in danger of becoming merely a Chicago actress; otherwise, in the eyes of New York, which believes that no stage history is made except on Broadway between 42d and 54th streets, a provincial star. She came here as Mrs. Samuel Pepys in "And So to Bed," two seasons ago, and saw her name go up in electric lamps after the opening. She came again last season in "Fires of Spring," which was unimportant except for her representation of a character patterned after Sarah Bernhardt; and again, late in the spring, in the witty Viennese comedy called "Candle Light." But to Broadway she was still unknown, and Chicago's prophecies about her future were received with a cynical smile at the ingenuousness of the middle west.

But after the opening of "Grand Hotel," a fortnight ago, the New Yorkers became Leontovich-conscious. They have discovered her for themselves. The reviews of that triumphant first night were eloquent in her praise. Here is a sample of the way the eastern dramatic critics are writing about her, culled from a postscript article by Richard Lockridge in the Evening Sun:

"Even in so strong a company, the acting of one woman is exceptional. The actress who thus stands out from her fellows is Eugenie Leontovich, a Russian, who, prior to the opening, was quite unknown. She is now the focal point of one of the most stirring dramatic recitals on Broadway, and this despite the fact that the very construction of the play would seem to make the existence of such a rôle impossible. She is the subject of praise for physical beauty. She is not one of those possessed of a voice which is in itself a work of art. It is not enough for her to be herself on the stage. . . .

"How far Miss Leontovich's success in 'Grand Hotel' proves that she has established herself as a fine actress is debatable. Here she is 'type cast'—she is a Russian and a dancer who is playing a dancer who is Russian. She is, in part at least, playing herself, even her accent contributing to the verisimilitude. She is as yet only tentatively a member of the English-speaking stage. She is now externally fitted for few parts. But it seems to me that she is spiritually fitted for almost any part."

After Miss Leontovich had read her scene would have been in a tuberculosis sanitarium.

The favorites of other seasons will be added to the present list this week. "La Boheme" will be presented Thursday evening by Claudia Muzio, Irene Pavloska, Antonio Cortis, Richard Bonelli, and Virgilio Lazzari, with Roberto Moranzoni conducting. "Der Rosenkavalier" is billed for Saturday afternoon with Frida Leider, Maria Rajdl, Maria Olszewska, Oscar Colcaire, Eduard Habich, and Alexander Kipnis, with Egon Pollak conducting.

And for further news of coming events, "Aida" will be sung on New Year's eve. There will be no increase in prices, mail orders for the performance may now be received, and announcement of the cast will be made later.

More Suggestions for Opera.

More opinions on how to make the Civic Opera house a better opera house are coming in. Dr. John W. O'Neill suggests that four boxes on each side be built into the walls just over the exit doors. He believes that they ought to bring in $1,000 to $1,500 each to help the revenue, and that they would also help to give the impression that people were in a real opera house.

Frank A. Taylor informs this department that from his seat in the second balcony a dull roar is to be heard whenever the music gets low or ceases for a moment. It sounds, he says, like a motor running or possibly the fans in the ventilating system. In any event, he finds it annoying, for which this department is not in the least inclined to blame him, and he says the old Auditorium used to be quiet during such pauses.

Mr. Taylor also suggests additions to the répertoire to consist of revivals of operas that were famous in their day and are unheard now, believing that it would be a more interesting and perhaps less uncertain course than hunting for novelties that may or may not succeed. He would like to hear Rossini's "Cenerentola" and "Otello," Donizetti's "Lucrezia Borgia," and "Favorita," Weber's "Der Freischuetz," Cimarosa's "Il Matrimonio Segreto," and Meyerbeer's "Les Huguenots," all of which used to enjoy high favor. This department will add for his benefit that the last named of his list was in the Chicago company's répertoire a dozen years ago. The others never have been.

Both the complaint and the suggestions are necessarily passed along to be regarded elsewhere.

Charity Concert Today.

The United German male choruses of Chicago, numbering 800 singers, will give a charity concert at Medinah temple this afternoon with the coöperation of the German-Austrian, Swiss, and German-Hungarian societies. Karl Reckzeh will conduct, and Gertrude Clauss, soprano, and Fritz Renk, violinist, will appear as soloists.

The entire net proceeds will be turned over to the German Aid society, an organization indorsed by the Chicago Association of Commerce. The hall has been donated gratis, the soloists are giving their services, and matters of printing have been contributed.

The music department of this newspaper tries to answer as many questions falling within its scope as possible. In answer to G. J. J. and others who have asked for the same sort of information, however, it is not prepared to advise upon music teachers who will give free training with the understanding that tuition is to be paid out of future earnings. Occasionally a scholarship contest is offered by an individual or organization, and news of this is printed when possible. It is the only kind of information of the sort that this department feels justified in making public.

Two Dance Programs.

The art of the dance in at least two of its phases is to be taken up in public this afternoon and tomorrow evening. Andreas Pavley and nine dancers from the Pavley-Oukrainsky ballet are to appear at the Eighth Street theater this afternoon; Harold Kreutzberg and Yvonne Georgi will give a recital at Orchestra hall tomorrow afternoon.

The program of Mr. Pavley and his associates will be general in character, in three parts to music by Glazounow, Delibes, Wilckens, Beethoven, Debussy, De Falla, and others. The second section will present a new form of entertainment called the Videballeton. It is described as combining motion pictures with the art of the living dancer to music by a reproductive device giving the volume of a full orchestra. Here the music is by Gounod, Varney, Gershwin, Glazounow, and Biset.

The Kreutzberg-Georgi pair are somewhat more specialized, at least in theory. As nearly as they can be described, they represent what is being thought, hoped, and accomplished in Germany regarding the dance art. If anything, they are a bit ahead of the procession. Being dancers of technical ability far beyond the customary, they have developed, perhaps theatricalized, German dance art considerably further than it exists elsewhere. But they are superb artists and deservedly popular.

For some time it has seemed as though the United States were on the verge of a great awakening on artistic dancing. From all that can be observed, the interest persists. It is true that those who are the most interested in the subject in great part confine their interest to technical problems of the dance rather than the true relation of dance to music. To that extent, therefore, their development is lopsided. But the dance is here, and here to stay. In the next five or ten years it ought to grow as it never has grown before. The chief trouble now is that an assemblage of good dancers, fitting scenic equipment and costumes, and proper musical setting runs into reasonably heavy expense.

Music Notes.

Dr. J. Lewis Browne, director of the music department of the Chicago public schools, has issued a new official march song for school children. The words are a paraphrase made by Dr. Browne of a poem by Gerard Moultrie and the music is by John Philip Sousa, not, however, taken from Mr. Sousa's rollicking band marches. It is in a four-four rhythm, tuneful, easily remembered, and intended to be sung in unison. Its title is simply "March-Song of the Chicago Schools," and its dedication is to Mayor Thompson and the school children of Chicago. Five thousand copies of it are to be distributed to the schools and rehearsals will begin immediately.

The second of the Chicago Chamber Music concerts will be played at Orchestra hall this afternoon by the Amy Neill String quartet. The program will consist of the Kodaly Second quartet, H. Waldo Warner's Suite in the Olden Style, and Schumann's Third quartet. If any other inducement is necessary, the admission charge is twenty-five cents.

The Bohemians of Chicago have issued invitations for the second annual dinner of the organization, to be given Sunday night, Jan. 4, in the ballroom of the Palmer house in honor of Samuel Insull. It is the custom of The Bohemians to give a dinner in honor of some famous musician or a man who has contributed in a marked degree to the cause of music. The first meeting, a year ago, was given to Frederick Stock, conductor of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, and 900 guests attended. The present one to Mr. Insull is in recognition of his unselfish devotion and liberal contributions to the cause of grand opera in Chicago.

Edward N. Hurley, Chicagoan, and chairman of the U. S. shipping board during the war, will be one of the speakers. Mr. Insull will have something to say regarding past, present, and future plans for opera. Herbert Witherspoon will be toastmaster. The program of music after the dinner will be given by artists of the Chicago Civic Opera company.

The Bohemians, founded two years ago, and now with a membership of about 300, is a society for the furtherance of music, improvement in the ethical and social life of the musician, and for the establishment of a fund of money for the aid of needy and indigent musicians. The last named is practically the only independent fund in Chicago for this purpose. Frederick Stock is the president, Herbert Witherspoon and Karleton Hackett are vice presidents, Charles J. Haake is secretary, and Marx E. Oberndorfer executive secretary and treasurer.

Baroness Flora Van Westen will give a song program in five languages in the salon of Mrs. Albert Allen, 645 North Michigan avenue, this evening at 8:15 o'clock. Gay Webster will be at the piano.

Ralph Dobbs, most of whose pianistic education was gained in Chicago, will play his first New York recital at the Town hall of that city next Friday afternoon.

MARY GARDEN.
[Copyright: Kessler Photo.]

DURING the last year there has been word every little while of unrelenting labor being put upon preparations for a new opera, "Camille," by Hamilton Forrest of Chicago. It will be disclosed for the first time on any stage at the Civic Opera house next Wednesday evening with Miss Garden in the name part. One is informed that the book contains the story of Dumas' "Camille," but brought down to date in modern Paris, even with jazz in the music.

Ricci, Violin Prodigy, Again Shows Genius

By Joan King.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Those hundreds of Gothamites who, after congratulating themselves upon their good fortune in obtaining seats for the appearance, Oct. 17, of last season's prodigy discovery, Ruggiero Ricci, were obliged to take their money back because the mayor refused to permit the recital, are now happy. After weeks of legal haranguing the young violinist's parents finally removed their objections to his public appearance, inasmuch as the proceeds of the concert would go to the mayor's unemployment fund. Thus last Sunday night the vastnesses of Mecca auditorium were filled to overflowing and Master Ricci played with the Manhattan Symphony orchestra for the second time in this town. It was with this organization that he made his sensational debut last season when 9 years old.

Dr. Henry Hadley opened an interesting program with Daniel Gregory Mason's overture, "Chanticleer," and then turned over his baton to Louis Persinger, Ricci's teacher, for the Beethoven concerto. It may be herewith recorded that the accompaniment with which he provided his tiny pupil was a model of good taste and musicianship.

Boy Is True Genius.

As for the boy's performance of this work which Yehudi Menuhin also chose several seasons ago, when he made his New York debut with the orchestra, it but served to strengthen the conviction formed last year that he is a true genius.

It goes without saying that his playing was received with a vast enthusiasm by his audience. As a matter of fact he was recalled a dozen times at least. But there was something much more unusual. Prodigies are not apt to call forth the unqualified approval of the entire critical coteries. Ruggiero Ricci did just that.

Of his playing one critic remarked: "It can hardly be questioned now that he is a genius. That he will be a greater player when he is 20 than he is at ten, and greater still at 30 than at 20 is certain. The characteristics of his performance are of sound and artistic kind. He has extraordinary technique of the kind that is inborn."

Seek Laudatory Adjectives.

Another critical comment was: "That he would give a technically deft performance, one not easily to be equaled by most able mature violinists, was to be expected after last year, but his reading of the Beethoven concerto led experienced musicians and not readily inflammable critics to search for laudatory adjectives."

He produced notable tonal results, though his violin was not of the best, while the dignity and maturity of his interpretation, the taste and musicianship of his phrasing, the lyricism, sense of form, and the impression of sympathetic understanding of the work revealed in his performance, deserved unqualified admiration, apart from any consideration of the fewness of his years."

Metropolitan Produces Comedy.

The Metropolitan Grand Opera company produced this week the first of its promised novelties for the season. This was Moussorgsky's comedy, "The Fair at Sorotchintzy," derived from Gobol's "Little Russian" masterpiece. "Evenings on a Farm near Dikanka." In order that the American production might be properly supervised, the Metropolitan invited Nicholai Icherepine, who has produced the one successful edition of Moussorgsky's posthumous sketches, to come to New York for the performance.

The audience was large and brilliant and seemed to enjoy the new offering. The cast provided a very competent interpretation. It comprised Pinza, Jagel, Windheim, Danise, Cehanovsky, Maria Mueller, Ina Bohrskaya, Bada, Altglass, and Maiatesta.

Gotham Views New Ethel and Ethel Jr.

decide to secede from the Union. It is a pest hole, a sink of iniquity, a breeding spot of lawlessness, corruption, and crime, and the country's curse. He comes east with his D. A. R. wife, a baritone club woman of high principles and forbidding approach, to lecture.

He finds certain scandal sheets printing the rumor of his daughter Emma's engagement to Joe Gresham, a Broadway playboy of some notoriety. The Krulls are horrified and apprehensive. Such an alliance might easily cost the senator reëlection. Therefore, the banns are forbidden and the young playboy shown the door.

Daughter Emma, however, is eastern by education, and broadminded. She is satisfied to make up her own mind about Joe. What worries her is the Phyllis Adrian for whom Joe admits he has been paying rent and who is now demanding $100,000 blackmail. Emma thinks she had better call on and have a talk with that young woman.

She calls, and that night the doped mistress of a racketeer living on the floor above throws herself out the window and is killed. The racketeer, at the moment, happens to be visiting Phyllis. The police arrive and they are all held as material witnesses, including the senator's daughter.

A Pretty Mess.

This makes a pretty mess. The newspapers, both lurid and weasel, are smeared with it. Which defeats the blackmail plot and gives the senator pause. Again Emma, a better politician than her pop, takes charge of the situation. Satisfied as to his fundamental goodness, Emma will marry Joe, take him west, buy him a ranch, and a ten gallon hat, toss him into the ring to help reëlect the senator and then—when everything is nicely set in Dakota, Emma and Joe will trot right back to New York and live in East 72d street.

"This Is New York" has the tang of truth and the grip of plausibility. Its dialogue is tersely written and naturally spoken, though it does grow a bit rhetorical occasionally, as it must with a booming Brookhart-Borah-Heflin senator present, and the wholesome west vs. the effete east argument to sustain.

The cast introduces Lois Moran, once of fame and the movies, now and for some time to come, I suspect, of the articulate drama. Miss Moran, unaffected, pretty, a thoroughly honest and charming young person, scored unmistakably.

Another Racket Exposed.

"Oh, Promise Me" is also as New Yorkish as Texas Guinan's night club. Written by Howard Lindsay and Bertrand Robinson, it seeks to expose the breach of promise racket that has grown prodigiously with hideaways, speakeasies, and prohibition.

It is also utterly brazen in exposure and language, one of the rowdier and ruddier farce comedies that angles boldly for laughs and cares not a bit whether they are legitimately or illegitimately earned. Here we have a self-made lawyer of shyster leanings who has just been through a sensational murder trial and is hungry for another case as sensational. The young girl who is in love with him, and eager to help him to fame, is also a filing clerk in the office of an aging and paternally minded gentleman with a habit of taking his young women clerks on business trips.

It occurs to the young woman, and likewise to the lawyer and their mutual friends, that the old gentleman might be framed. He could be invited to the young woman's apartment, forced into compromising situations, and then sued.

The plot is set, the old fool falls comically into it, the girl is found partly dressed in a day bed when witnesses appear and the trial for a quarter-million damages follows. With perjured testimony the case is won.

The laughter is coarse and free, which indicates a Broadway success. Lee Tracy helps a good deal with the fun, playing the lawyer as enthusiastically as he played the hoofer in "Broadway" and the reporter in "The Front Page." Donald Meek and Mary Philips are in the cast.

"Office Wife" Disappoints.

Dear Mae: Saw "Office Wife" and what a mess they made of it! In the first place Lewis Stone was too old for the part and in the second place Ann was not the sort of girl in the book that she was in the picture. She did not make a deliberate play for her boss in the story and was a sensible, ambitious person and not the silly, sensuous flapper of Dorothy Mackaill's idea. Why do they do it!

Would like to see Marie Dressler and Polly Moran in a picturization of "Tish" and "More Tish" by Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Yours sincerely,

K. M. C.

Editor's Note: Yes? As for "Tish"—why not, indeed!

Dear Miss Tinée: I read your review of "Up the River" yesterday and agree with you, as I usually do. But I like to read your comments even if I don't always think the same way.

There was something else about the picture that I liked which you didn't mention. I can't remember a single smutty line. "Up the River" may have seemed disrespectful to prison reformers without a sense of humor, but it was good, clean fun. And, much as the term "good, clean fun" grates on the ears of some people, it is a pleasing novelty after the recent spasm of he-man comedies that get their laughs by dirty jokes and insinuations.

Yours for more comedies like this—funny though clean.

Sincerely,

JOY STUART.

Editor's Note: I'm with you!

Charm Returns to Stage with Play by Milne

One of Burns Mantle's Ten Best Plays.

By Charles Collins.

New York "notices" she did something unusual and altogether charming. She put in a long distance call for Chicago and her husband, Gregory Ratoff, now playing at the Great Northern in "Three Little Girls." She wanted to tell him all about it, of course. But more than that; she excited him to make a point of conveying her gratitude to the Chicago critics who had anticipated her New York victory.

Thumbs Down!

The New York reviews of Ethel Barrymore's appearance in "Scarlet Sister Mary" are nearly unanimous on these points:

1. That the play is flat and undramatic.

2. That the Gullah Negroes may have fictional value in Julia Peterkin's Pulitzer prize novel, from which the play was taken, but that they are a dull lot in the drama.

3. That Miss Barrymore's decision to play a Negress is incomprehensible, and that her glamour is hidden under her deep tan grease paint.

4. That her daughter is an attractive girl who may do well on the stage in spite of her natural complexion.

5. That the other members of her company are just white folks painted middle color who seem decidedly fusty when compared with the Negro actors in "Green Pastures."

In other words, New York doesn't think much of "Scarlet Sister Mary" and lists it as an artistic error in Miss Barrymore's brilliant career.

Percy Hammond of the New York Herald-Tribune did not choose to pass opinion upon the play or its performance, because of the recent unpleasantness between Miss Barrymore and the sensitive critics of Gotham, who believe they are privileged to make sarcastic remarks from across the footlights. But he attended the opening and wrote a report of it, in which he hinted that his son, "one of the leading business' toughest eggs," shed tears over the woes of Sister Mary.

Shakespeare by Mr. Leiber

FRITZ LEIBER'S Chicago Civic Shakespeare Repertory company begins the last two weeks of its engagement at the Civic theater tomorrow night. Here is the schedule of performances for the week: Monday, "As You Like It"; Tuesday, "Richard III."; Wednesday matinée, "Twelfth Night"; Wednesday night, "Macbeth"; Thursday, "The Merchant of Venice"; Friday, "King Lear"; Saturday matinée, "Hamlet"; Saturday night, "Twelfth Night."

When the Chicago run ends Dec. 20 Mr. Leiber will take his company to New York for an engagement at the Ambassador theater, opening Christmas night. "King Lear" will be the bill for the Broadway premiere.

"Princess Charming" didn't last long on Broadway, but there is talk that the Shuberts will send it on tour with a new cast, to try to get some value out of its handsome settings and costumes. Jeanne Aubert has been mentioned for the leading rôle. . . . Georgie Grossmith of the New York cast of "Princess Charming" will have an important rôle in "My Sister and I," a new operetta that the Shuberts are staging.

George White is thinking seriously about putting on another "Scandals." He wants it to be a popular priced edition, and will show it to Broadway fans in February if he can find performers who do not want too much money. . . . Mr. Ziegfeld is revising and improving his "Smiles," which the first nighters said had a dull libretto.

"MICHAEL AND MARY"

MADGE KENNEDY and TERENCE NEILL.

THIS pleasant domestic scene is from "Michael and Mary," the comedy by A. A. Milne, which is now being offered by the Dramatic League of Chicago at the Harris theater. Madge Kennedy, last seen here in "Paris Bound," is the lady in the case, and Terence Neill, new leading man, is the happy fellow.

Ed Wynn Gives 'Simple Simon'; Play by Coward

ED WYNN will begin an engagement at the Grand Opera house this evening in "Simple Simon," the musical comedy which Florenz Ziegfeld staged but which is now under the comedian's own management. This entertainment was popular in New York last season, opening in February and running until the approach of summer.

The show approaches the extravaganzas of the old régime in form, being a fantasy of fairy tale and nursery rhyme characters, and it gives Mr. Wynn many opportunities for his unique line of comic nonsense. The libretto was written by Mr. Wynn himself, in collaboration with Guy Bolton. The music and lyrics were contributed by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart.

Harriet Hoctor, the lovely dancer who made a national reputation since she first appeared here with the Duncan Sisters in "Topsy and Eva," is featured in the company. Other players of principal rôles are Wini Shaw, Margaret Breen, Jack Squires, Marjorie and Carter De Haven Jr. [children of the easily remembered Carter Sr.]; Harry Shannon, Joseph Schrode, Frieda Mierse, Billie Seward, Villi Milli and Barbara Hamilton.

"Hay Fever," a comedy by Noel Coward, will be staged by the Goodman theater repertory company next Tuesday night as the third offering of its season. The play centers around an actress who has retired, but who continues to dramatize herself in everyday life to the consternation of her husband and children.

Margaret Wycherly, an actress of distinguished career on the American stage during the past twenty-five years, will have the leading rôle, as guest player. She was the star, on the stage and in the movies, of "The Thirteenth Chair," written by her husband, Bayard Veiller. Others in the cast will be Earl McDonald, Harry Mervis, Kent Smith, William Brenton, Katherine Krug, Florence Williams, Ellen Root and Margaret Love. "Hay Fever" will hold the stage of the Goodman during the next four weeks.

Acts for Theater Guild.

June Walker, last seen on the Broadway stage in "Waterloo Bridge," has been engaged for "Green Grow the Lilacs," the Lynn Riggs play, which the Theater Guild will open in Boston tomorrow. Miss Walker has replaced Helen Coburn in the Guild's company.

New Play for Irish Actors; Gotham Stage

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Arthur Sinclair and Maire O'Neill, alumni of the original Irish Players, may make another appearance on Broadway this season. A play from Dublin, called "The Real McCoy," is at their disposal, and a certain Sam Lowett, unknown among Manhattan's impresarios, is said to be willing to stage it for them.

"The Real McCoy" was produced at the Abbey of Dublin, with Sinclair and Miss O'Neill in the leading rôles, in the summer of 1928. One of the Dublin newspaper correspondents called it the best comedy written in Ireland within his memory. This pair of Irish veterans came to New York recently to appear in Jed Harris' production of "Mr. Gilhooley," which didn't last long.

Booth Tarkington has written a new play called "Colonel Satan," and George C. Tyler is staging it. Columbus, O., will see its first performance Dec. 26; then it will visit Indianapolis and other midwestern cities before it is brought into New York. McKay Morris will have the title rôle. Andrew Lawlor and Jessie Royce Landis will also be prominent in the cast.

Rumors that Maude Adams has abandoned her plan to return to the stage this season are being denied at the Erlanger office. The latest story is that she wants Philip Merivale for her leading man, and he happens to be busy in "Death Takes a Holiday" on tour. So the production is being delayed until a cast that satisfies the star can be assembled.

The Theater Guild is said to be seriously considering for production a new German play called "Wunder Um Verdun," by a certain Herr Chlumberg. It is now being acted in Leipzig, to the ecstasy of critics, and it sounds as if might be about the war. Thus far the Guild has launched four out of the eight productions which it scheduled for this season. They are "Elizabeth the Queen," "Roar, China!" "In the Meantime," and "Green Grow the Lilacs." The fifth, "Much Ado About Nothing"—the Guild's first venture into Shakespeare—will be placed in rehearsal next week.

Philip Barry has written a new play called "Hail and Farewell." The title will be changed, because it was once used by the now unproductive William J. Hurlbut. Arthur Hopkins is considering its production. . . . And if you like to check up on the modernists of American drama, a word about Eugene O'Neill is in order. He is now in Morocco.

News of Films and Players.

Mary Alden, well known years ago on the screen for her performance in "The Old Nest," has announced her intention of coming back to films.

It's a funny thing, but Edmund Breeze, one of Hollywood's well known old time actors who plays as a butler in many big productions, retired from the stage years ago, and only went into films because his wife wanted six new cows for her dairy and they needed to paint the barn on the farm to which they had retired. That was fifteen years ago, but he is still in pictures; some one else has the farm.

The Chicago World's Fair of 1933 probably will be recorded in Technicolor firm, according to word at the Technicolor plant. Many of the foreign exhibits which are to be sent in early will be so photographed and sent around the world as reel news for advertising purposes.

Another actor to fall for the bow and arrow stuff is Glenn Tryon. A recent hunting trip into Mexico gave him a chance to try out the bow and arrow, and he is enthusiastic over results. This adds Tryon to a long list of archers in Hollywood, Roy Pomeroy, director and technician, is the leader of the local Robin Hood band with the record in archery at the neighborhood ranges.

Many of the residents of the hills outside Hollywood had some strange scenery in their back yards recently after a record big wind. Forty mile an hour winds such as that one are not common in California, and no one ever figures with these things as contingencies out in them thar hills. Hence the sudden appearance of a few icebergs, large patches of "snow" and other arctic props caused consternation until the inhabitants got a second look.

The props had been carried by the wind from a location of Columbia Pictures, on which arctic scenes for "Dirigible" were being made. One ice field 300 feet long and 40 feet high was entirely missing and no one knows were it landed. Workmen had to build entirely new sets before work could proceed on the picture, and the inhabitants of Monrovia, Arcadia, Altadena, and other nearby towns dug themselves out of bales of white corn flakes of prop snow and huge sheets of painted canvas and wood framework.

An English film publication that reached Hollywood through the mails has convulsed readers with its review of Eddie Cantor's "Whoopee." It says, "New comedy star steals film from Follies beauties." A great boost for Eddie, who is thinking of retiring. Eddie must have fooled them with his horn rimmed glasses in the scene with the nurse.

ARMCHAIR PLAYGOER

By Fanny Butcher.

IN CHICAGO.

If you yearn for the whimsies of A. A. Milne in "Michael and Mary" or, having sat mediumly far back in the house and having been completely unable to hear, you wish to read the play and find out what the gentle words were which issued from the lips of the actors, you will have either to get on a boat and go to England or to hasten to an enterprising bookseller who imports English editions, for "Michael and Mary" has not as yet been published in this country, although Chatto & Windus publish it in London.

A. A. MILNE.

It is a little unkind on the author's part, it seems to us, not to have made the two imposing publishing gentlemen which Michael meets when he sells his first novel, Messrs. Chatto and Windus, instead of Mr. Chapman and Mr. Hall. In America such a chance for free publicity would never have been passed by. Either Mr. Chatto or Mr. Windus (providing there are encumbents of either name in the firm) would have insisted that their author be more loyal to his publisher.

Burns Mantle, in "The Best Plays of 1929-1930," says that when "Michael and Mary" was first written it was designed as one of those flashback dramas, with the action beginning in the present and the dramatic events of the lives of Michael and Mary which led up to the present crisis following in later acts. "But while he was at work something happened to change Mr. Milne's mind regarding the technique to be employed and the play was altered to its present form."

The first title of the play was "This Flower," taken from a quotation from Shakespeare, "Out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety," though Michael was to have substituted the word "self-respect" for "safety." Some one suggested calling it "The Adorable Criminals," but Milne was quick and violent in his objections. Finally, after many conferences, "Michael and Mary" was agreed upon.

Mr. Milne is the modern version of Barrie in the theater, the whimsy boy. This writer belongs to the loudest and lustiest ballyhooers for A. A. Milne, the author of "When We Were Very Young." We even buy copies of it to give to grownups. But A. A. Milne in a "whimsical" mood reminds us a good deal of a cracker that has been nestling in a bowl of milk for some time. It may be wholesome, but its snap is nil.

If you yearn to know what "Hay Fever" is about before you expose yourself to its contagion at the Goodman theater on Tuesday evening, you can find it published by Samuel French. Noel Coward, its author, is one of the most remarkable figures in the international dramatic circus today. He was, first of all, an actor. Then he began writing plays, in which he acted, and finally he set his plays to music, writing the music, also, and helping to direct the production.

"Bitter Sweet" followed his very successful "This Year of Grace." And "Bitter Sweet" was the most phenomenal success London has known for years. That success is especially interesting to Americans because its star was Peggy Wood, an American.

Peggy Wood is not only an actress and a singer, and the wife of a poet and novelist, John V. A. Weaver, but she is an author in her own right. This year she wrote "Actors and People: Both Sides of the Footlight" [Appleton], which is full of anecdotes of the mighty. There is an especially amusing little chat with Bernard Shaw recorded by Miss Wood. She played "Candida," you remember. A friend of hers had asked Shaw to see her and Shaw replied, "Send her along, and I will be as nice to her as my nature will allow." His nature must have given him carte blanche in the business of being nice, for he was charming.

"I am now 'Poor Old Shaw,'" he said. "So academic, so old fashioned! That's a strange experience for me, my children. You infants can't imagine what openings of my plays used to be like. Cat calls, boos, people getting up and haranguing—small riots like the original Wagner opera premieres. But now I have become vieux jeu—what's worse, a sage, my God! A sage! Having reached seventy without being struck dead, I am now—venerable."

"The Weavers," by Gerhart Hauptmann, will be played by the Studio players tonight and next Saturday and Sunday evenings at the Civic Art theater, 1358 North Clark street. It is one of Hauptmann's greatest plays and you may read it in his collected works published by the Viking Press.

SHAKESPEARE GIRL

MARY HONE.

FRITZ LEIBER'S season in Shakespeare's plays at the Civic theater has disclosed a promising young leading woman in Miss Hone, here depicted as Viola in "Twelfth Night." She also appears as Ophelia in "Hamlet," as Calpurnia in "Julius Caesar," as Cordelia in "King Lear," as Lady Anne in "Richard III.," and as a gentlewoman in "Macbeth." She follows a realistic method with effective results. Her Shakespearean heroines are unorthodox but interesting.

'I'm a Modern,' Says Mr. Hodge; Theater News

WILLIAM HODGE explains why he deviated from his formula to write "The Old Rascal," as follows:

"A playwright who does not keep up with his generation might as well give up. I can't say that I approve entirely of the modern trend, but it interests me as a spectacle. Life and ideas are not what they used to be, and whether or not one approves, one must acknowledge the fact. I wrote 'The Old Rascal' to show my children that I was as modern as they are."

"Collision," a play by Rudolph Lothar and Erno Sebesi, is announced for production by Gensler and Green. The play has been adapted for the American stage by John Anderson, dramatic critic of the New York Evening Journal, who made the version of Gogol's "Inspector General" which is being produced by Jed Harris. "Collision" is expected to open in January.

Jewish theatrical managers, representing nine houses in New York, have delivered an ultimatum to the Jewish stage union that if wage scales are not reduced immediately the playhouses will close their season tonight. About 700 members of seven unions, including 150 actors, will be affected.

Edgar Wallace, English author of "On the Spot," has decided to come to New York next month to supervise rehearsals of his "The Man Who Changed His Name," which he will produce in association with the Shuberts and Lee Ephraim. The play will not be staged at the Forrest theater, as originally intended, because of the success of "On the Spot." Mr. Wallace visited this country last in 1929.

Because of its third rejection by the London censor, the plan to produce Prince Bibesco's comedy, "Ladies All," has been abandoned in England. Elmer Harris' adaptation from the French, which is current in New York, was submitted twice, after which a literal translation was presented to the censor. All three versions were refused a license. Mr. Harris made a number of changes in his manuscript before it was submitted for the second time.

will he still admire the sparkle of your teeth? . . . or will you let your gums grow soft, your teeth dull?

DON'T THINK MEN DON'T NOTICE YOUR LOVELY TEETH

Of course they notice your teeth. Men always admire a woman's teeth that sparkle with health and cleanliness. But will this young man of yours still compliment you on your beautiful teeth a few years from now? Think this out. You eat soft foods. Your gums get little or no stimulation. Your gums get lazy—soft—lifeless. In time the cells scarcely function at all. Your gums grow soft—your teeth grow dull.

ONE DAY—"PINK TOOTH BRUSH"

One day those tender gums begin to bleed. Your tooth brush shows the tell-tale tinge of pink. From now on—watch out for gingivitis, trench mouth and pyorrhea. Watch out for the loss of that natural gleam that all healthy teeth have. Watch out for the loss of some of your apparently sound teeth! For bleeding gums are a threat to your beauty.

BUT YEARS FROM NOW, HE'LL STILL BE PROUD OF YOUR LOVELY TEETH—IF . .

Two years from now—three, four years from now—will he be just as proud of your gleaming smile? He will—if you keep your gums firmly healthy and your teeth sparkling with Ipana Tooth Paste and massage. Every time you clean your teeth with Ipana, lightly massage your gums with Ipana on the brush. For Ipana contains ziratol, a preparation well known and long used by the profession for its efficacy in toning and invigorating tender gum tissue. LITTLE SISTER

EVANGELINE RALEIGH.

Elman Release Will Delight Violin Lovers

Tschaikowsky Is Given Fine Recording.

By Edward Moore.
[Tribune Music Critic.]

TEN violinists, but more particularly to those of the laity who enjoy violin music well played, is confidently recommended the combined Victor release of Mischa Elman playing the Tschaikowsky concerto in D with the London Symphony orchestra conducted by John Barbirolli. (Musical Masterpiece series, Album M-83.)

The concerto has had a curious, not to say ironical, history. Composed in the season of 1877-'78, offered and dedicated to one of the most famous of all violinists, the late Leopold Auer, refused by him because of its "insurmountable technical difficulties," finally played by Adolph Brodsky, to whom a second dedication was made, attacked brutally by Vienna critics, including that man of savage vocabulary, Hanslick, and in its own good time becoming one of the most popular of all violin concertos with violinists and audiences alike.

In view of the fact that in these days conservatory students dash blithely through its measures, Auer's objections of a half century ago are not altogether easy to understand. There is a story, however, that some violinist—perhaps it was Brodsky—edited its solo part, and, with the permission of Tschaikowsky, who was no violinist, eased off some of the difficulties that the composer in the innocence of his heart had inserted.

Wizard of the Violin.

Certainly it is no student's performance that Victor offers here. Elman is one of the wizards of the violin. In technical brilliance, in warm, suave tone, in the ability to lean heavily against glowing melody and to emphasize the pulsations of rhythm, he has made his own place in the world of violinists. And in this concerto, with its passionate song, its delirious dance, he has picked a number thoroughly in accord with his own musical personality.

One comes away from hearing this set (by the way, it is of four double faced records) with renewed admiration for the art of making disks. From Elman's rapier flash of a harmonic up at the top of the scale to a pizzicato stroke on the G string, it is all faithfully recorded, and with an uncanny resemblance to the sound of his violin in real life. And the orchestra sounds orchestral. The clarinet tone is pure clarinet, the flute is flute, string tone will never be mistaken for either. The theme of the series is an accurate description.

Timely Offerings.

As the Christmas season draws near Brunswick makes a timely offering. In the Hall of Fame-International, No. 90,100, one hears on the one face "Stille Nacht, Heilige Nacht," and on the other "O Du Froehliche, O Du Selige." Both are made by the Berlin Singing Teachers' society, a male chorus under the direction of Hugo Strasel. They are sung without accompaniment in excellent tone and fine recording.

Bach also has his Christmas tide implications, and two more Brunswick records, likewise of the Hall of Fame-International, serve well to keep them alive. They should be considered in conjunction; No. 90,105 presents "Come Thou, Creator, Holy Ghost" and "Don Festive Garments, O My Soul," both played by the Philharmonic orchestra of Berlin, the latter with cello solo by H. Graudan, directed by Jascha Rosenstein. No. 90,101 is peculiarly timely because it is made by the choir of St. Thomas church of Leipzig. Karl Straube is the conductor and the numbers are the chorale, "Dir, Dir, Jehova will ich singen," and "Alles was Odem hat," that highly florid finale from the motet, "Singet dem Herrn."

The orchestral record is played from the fresh revision made by Arnold Schoenberg, who takes time off from reforming the world with his examples of atonal harmony to do this sort of thing, where harmony is an exact science. He has done his work accurately and reverently. It was, of course, impracticable to make use of the antique and outmoded instruments that Bach had in mind when he wrote the pieces.

Winter Resort Season Opens; Throngs Head for Sunlands

DOWN IN DIXIE, SPORTSMEN, IS YOUR PARADISE

All the Hunting and Fishing You Want.

BY BOB BECKER.

Although the northland has its charms for the outdoorsman in midwinter, fishermen and hunters and golfers apparently do not consider it such an awful hardship to go south at this time of the year in order to eat broiled quail beneath a palm tree, catch black bass while the sun browns the back of one's neck, and swat a golf ball past a covey of quail or over a water and alligator hazard.

On the contrary, the southland with its moss draped cypress trees, sun bathed bass lakes, and sporty midwinter fishing is attracting an ever increasing army of outdoorsmen who refuse to wrap up their fishing clothes in mothballs and lay aside their shotguns for snow shovels just because the "season is closed" sign has been hung out in the northern states.

Bountiful Land of Sports.

If you start with Louisiana and its famous Evangeline country where geese and ducks occupy an age old "winter resort" in the tidal marshes, and continue eastward through Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, the Carolinas, and southward through Florida, you have a winter playground that gives the northern outdoorsman everything in fishing and hunting he can get up north with so many additional sport novelties that it's like a circus with ten rings and a dozen sideshows.

Would you like to decoy snow geese with decoys made out of newspapers and listen to the musical French of the old world as spoken by the Cajuns of Louisiana?

Here Are Some More.

Or how about wild turkey hunting with quaint old colored guides and tame live decoy turkeys that challenge the wild gobblers, golf on sporty courses against a southern background of moss draped oak trees, horseback riding, quail hunting on lovely old before the war plantations, sunrise dove shoots

YOU'LL HAVE TO ADMIT, FOLKS, THERE'S MUCH TO BE SAID FOR A VACATION NOW

A dramatic moment in a quail hunt near the gulf coast—the three dogs "on point," the contented, sun tanned hunter waiting with his gun at the ready for a covey to rise.

Yachts on the blue Pacific seen from a shady lawn at Avalon, Catalina Island. Beyond the balustrade small marquees offer shelter to observers of marine maneuvers and activities on the beach below.

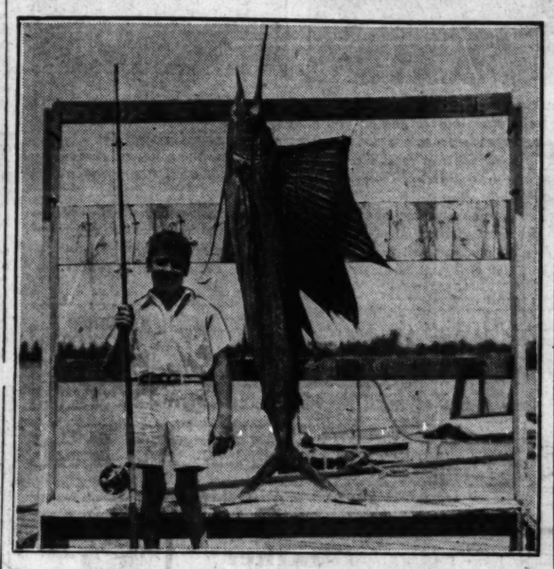
MEET THREE DOGS WHO KNOW WHAT'S WHAT IN HUNTING

Hunting dogs have their own aristocracy and their own adventures. In the above photograph, snapped by Bob Becker, TRIBUNE Woods and Waters editor, the dogs are, left to right, Rex, a 12 year old pointer; his daughter, Dottie, and his son, Bozo, both about 2 years old.

Rex is the grand old man of the canines in his own district. He has had more than 5,000 birds shot over him. He has twice been bitten by rattlesnakes and lived to bark the tale. His allotted span of life already has run two years beyond its course, yet he still hunts for an hour and a half each morning and the same period in the afternoon, and will nose out the quail for Bob Becker again during Christmas week.

Rex is one dog who answers automobile horn signals when the hunters choose that method of transportation. He has practically taught Dottie and Bozo his own technique of workmanship, and Bozo is expected before long to take his place.

A Miami beauty displays one of the latest styles in silk beach pajamas. Fashion has ruled that deep sun tans are not desirable this season.



The young man well may smile, for, though he weighs only 50 pounds, he recently landed this 58 pound sailfish off the Florida coast.

U. S. TRADE LEADERS TO MAKE GOOD WILL TOUR THROUGH CUBA

Eight Chicagoans are members of a general committee that is arranging a good will tour of Cuba which will take 550 bankers and business men from the United States to the island for an economic survey. The party will sail from New York on Dec. 27 on the Morro Castle.

Cuba's economic slump in recent months, as shown by the decreased price of the island's two staple products, sugar and tobacco, and in the unemployment situation, is one of the factors behind the projected trip. Its object will be to bring American and Cuban business men together in conferences for a discussion of trade problems, in addition to providing a holiday in Havana.

Chicago members of the committee are Emile Frisch, president of the American Bread Wrapper company; Elbert Antrim, of THE TRIBUNE; Charles Cutler Dawes of Dawes & Co.; Robert Sherman, Evanston attorney; James P. Haynes, vice president of the Association of Commerce; Hugo E. Otto of the National Bank of the Republic; Edward Price Bell, and Amos Miller of Miller, Gorham & Wales.

SNOW DODGING TOURISTS SHOW NEW INCREASE

Warm Breezes and Beaches Are Lure.

BY KATHLEEN McLAUGHLIN.

Sunward the tide of travel takes its way.

King Winter has cracked his whip too rashly and too long. He has been too rude a guest—has come too early, stayed too late, and long since has worn out his welcome. Now tens of thousands of his former subjects, in revolt against his rule, slip out of his dominion each winter season and troop away to enjoy a tropic holiday far beyond the pinch of his icy fingers and the reach of his bitter breath.

The Time Is Come to Go.

The exodus is on—the season is at hand. Golf clubs and tennis racquets come out of storage to be tagged for the trek to balmier climes. Bathing suits are squeezed into the bulging bags. Soft, light clothes take up most of the room, and fluffy formal gowns that soon will be dancing to the mesmerizing strains of orchestras in palm fringed gardens.

Everybody who can possibly afford to join in the rush, and many more can than think they can, are just about to board out the cat, lock the front door, and barge merrily away to station or pier.

Down there where the sun opposes the entrance of that hoary tyrant, Winter, and opposes it successfully, soft zephyrs blow up from the equator to banish even remembrance of his brutal rule. There, whitecapped waves come tumbling onto the warm silver sands of miles of beaches.

Blue Waters, Soft Breezes.

Whispering oaks and palm trees wave overhead, and the splash of divers plunging into water violet blue and crystal clear, vies with the snap of racquet against ball on nearby courts, and the sharp click of driver

THRONGS FOOL WINTER; TAKE TRAIL OF SUN

Gentle Breezes, Warm Sands Await Them.

connecting with golf ball on adjacent links.

If any one doubts the prevalence of the winter vacation policy, let him but put a question to the travel agents whose business it is to book reservations for the fleeing sun worshipers.

First sponsored by a few big business men who found it expedient to remain in the city during its best season—summer—and to take their vacations during the colder months when there were plenty of minor executives around to share the burden of responsibility, the custom of reserving the annual vacation until that time has spread and spread and spread.

Chicagoland Welcomes Idea.

Especially in Chicagoland is the innovation a welcome one. For this region is at its most beautiful in the summer, and uses its populace most harshly just before, during and after the holiday season. Those who elect to work in summer and play in winter therefore serve their own best interests by coming back to the job in fine trim and eager to be at work once more.

The point is, that the present offers the greatest values in the way of transportation that have been available to the public in many a day. Agents and transportation companies have reduced their rates, and investigation will reveal the most surprising bargains in the way of long and short trips, cruises and even 'round the world jaunts. Already the difference has been discovered by any number of persons. Better ask for rates tomorrow for your contemplated vacation.

Travel Agents Optimistic.

Everything considered, there may be a drop in the total number of northerners who take the southward trail this winter, but the end of the season probably will find that the difference was hardly disastrous. In fact, the vanguard of the winter visitors already is arriving in the territory below the Mason and Dixon line, and indications are that there will be an increase, according to the men who estimate the strength of this advancing army and make preparations for its accommodation.

Each nook and cranny of the sun-drenched states and countries has its devotees. Miami, Palm Beach, St. Petersburg, Jacksonville, Tampa, Biloxi, Pass Christian—in fact, all the gulf coast; Texas and Arizona, with Galveston, San Antonio, and nearby cities each popular with its own element; Cuba, with its gay capital of Havana and its foreign atmosphere; Nassau in the Bahamas; Bermuda, with its British tendencies and government; and Hawaii, exotic and satisfying. And back on our own west coast is the climate of California, which the native sons never grow weary of praising.

Many Other Lands Beckon.

Winter travel from this country is far from being restricted to these almost entirely domestic points, however. Spain grows progressively more popular with the hordes who flee the snow and sleet. Mexico has of late experienced an unprecedented tide of travel into her ancient and picturesque cities. North Africa is increasingly pictured as the ideal country in which to relax and absorb energy and ambition for the ensuing months. The West Indies claim their share of the sun seekers, while Egypt and the Nile loom large in importance on many an itinerary.

The French Riviera, of course, always attracts its "regulars," and Italy draws another crowd. Mediterranean cruises need only to be mentioned to insure an enthusiastic chorus of acclaim. To say nothing of the younger generation and the older concurring delightedly in the idea that the thing to do is to go "rolling down to Rio."

Much of the Caribbean region remains unexplored by vacationists, so if you wish to demonstrate that you're not afraid to get off the beaten path of travel, which is increasingly the smart thing to do, haul out the maps and have a look at what they have to offer.

Miami Helps the Colonist.

Miami, on Bay Biscayne, an old and honored host to the winter colonists, has an ingeniously devised scheme for fitting apartments and hotel reservations to the purses and the preferences of prospective arrivals there. In 150 rental agencies throughout the north one can walk in and select an apartment for the forthcoming season in Miami with as much satisfaction as one selects a seat at the theater from the floor plan shown at the boxoffice.

Not only are the rentals, number of rooms, and facilities available known in each instance but photographs of the more expensive abodes are provided, as well as the entire list of all furnishings, linen, and silver. The agency not only supplies as large or as small, as expensive or as cheap a temporary home as its client desires, but sees to it that it is located conveniently near a school, a church, a drug store, car and bus lines, and groceries.

The Economy of Comfort.

Some northerners assert that they can make the trip south and spend the cold weather in comfort in any one of several cities for less than their living expenses would be in their own homes. The cost of heating a house or apartment is given as the big item of expense here. This more than covers the total of their railroad fare, they point out, with no little pride in their cleverness at such manipulation of income to make life more joyous.

Attractions of every kind and color, size and speed dot the calendar of the winter months in the lurking places of Old Sol. If your hobby is horse racing you may indulge it at the American Jockey club in Oriental park, Havana, or at the Miami Jockey club, where a noteworthy string of ponies will be on view.

If your choice is for water sports, practically any port you touch will provide them in variety and quantity. There is, naturally, the Bay Biscayne regatta at Miami with its annual influx of vessels, and there is also the Gasparilla carnival at Tampa, to be staged as usual during the South Florida fair in that city. The date for the water pageant will be Feb. 2.

Wherever fancy leads or one's purse dictates, the winter resorts will be waiting with their inviting pools and bridle paths, golf links, and tennis courts, outdoor restaurants and dance gardens, rippling streams and rushing rivers, their mountains and their valleys, sunshine and shadow.

Sails will billow and fill as the boats move out to ride the waves; canoes will slip smoothly along this or that serene water highway; motors will sputter and pop as their speedy prows cut a path for them from shore to shore.

There will be a time, and a place, and a favorite sport for every one—except Old Man Winter. Have a good time!

Society Samples the Winter Resort Styles

Miss Isabel Chaplin (left) demonstrates the attractiveness of the new dinner pajamas which it is predicted will be quite the thing where the vacationists gather. This model, with its short train at either side of the full trousers, hardly distinguishable from a skirt, is slightly more extreme than the average. Gold and brown brocaded metal cloth is used for the trousers. A wide girdle of black velvet ribbon has a diagonal line of small gilt buttons at the side closing. The brief, straight jacket of tangerine velvet makes an excellent foil for the gold and black combination.

At the right Princess Rostislav displays an evening gown that portends the success of allover embroidery. The model, adjudged one of the most distinguished of the early arrivals of the season, is of white, with slip of petal pink taffeta that shows off the pattern. The short sleeves, the tricky peplum, and the bottom of the skirt all are bound in the petal pink, and the narrow belt is of the same shade of taffeta.

PAJAMAS GROW UP TO RANK OF DINNER COSTUME

They'll Be the Thing at Resorts, Is Prediction.

All femininity wants to know about the smart duds destined to be packed anon into capacious trunks, and checked in the near future to the playgrounds of the southland. It's an important topic, for what is accepted at Palm Beach and Havana, at Miami and Bermuda and Nassau in the Bahamas during the next few months portends pretty accurately what will be favored of Chicagoennes for wear this coming spring and summer seasons.

Nobody knows better than Mrs. Ford Carter, style mentor for the fashion bureau at one of the country's greatest stores which modes have the best chance of achieving popularity in the social whirl this winter. She as a predilection, say those who consult her, for the one mode out of the many that are born, which will survive the acid test of general appeal and continue to flourish while the others wither.

Dinner Pajamas the Thing.

Mrs. Carter is authority for the prediction that "dinner pajamas" will be the outstanding innovation in the wardrobes of the winter resorters. A far cry they are from the sprightly, casual costumes we've become accustomed to meeting on the best of beaches the last couple of years. They still are casual in feeling, but O—how different in atmosphere!

These smartly sophisticated, gorgeously fashioned rigs have practically nothing in common with their more plebian inspirations. The richest of fabrics, the subtlest of lines are theirs. Couturiers have poured into them their most painstaking efforts, and lavish and brilliant are the results.

They come in the most vivid of color combinations—in gold and black, blue with silver, white with scarlet, gold cloth with tones of red and black setting off the shimmer of the material. They are for the semi-formal and the smaller social functions, and quite at home indeed in the best of company.

Not Intended for Beach.

They never, of course, will descend to the beach in their more lavish phases, being intended for a different type of recreation. Satins, velvets, and both silver and gold cloth are extensively employed in fashioning them.

These luxurious pajamas sets make indispensable the type of footwear that accompanies them—the glorified sandal. These are of many materials and colors. Some are of velvet, some of white kid with silver trimming, and others designed entirely in gold, thickly encrusted with gold embroidery in floral patterns. Seldom if ever have more ornate styles been on view here.

One pajama set that was being admired yesterday was of heavy oyster white satin, the full trousers falling to the instep, and even all around the bottom like a dress. The jacket, falling to the hip line, was a simple, straight affair, depending for its distinction on the sleeves, which were plain down to the elbow, then flared into wide, graceful cuffs. The coat, like the twisted strands of velvet ribbon that made the rope girdle, was of scarlet velvet—perfect for a brunette.

These dinner pajamas were first launched at Antibes and other continental gathering places, and already have made their bow in the east, according to Mrs. Carter, who reports that they are tremendously liked for wear at dinner parties and other gatherings.

As for frocks, informal dresses borrow inspiration from the 1830s or thereabouts, and are often as demure as they are devastating. Fields in soft shades are the newest fancy, especially in mulls, lightweight silks, and similar materials. Skirts are long and full both for afternoon and evening dresses, and tiny puff sleeves, cap sleeves or bands of the material denote their recent origin.

Evening gowns also breathe the spirit of youth and a certain tang of those earlier decades when the grandmothers of the present generation were sweet sixteen. Sheer organdy, long and full and exquisitely embroidered, frequently is the material chosen. White reigns supreme.

One Gown Described.

Such a gown has been ordered in a certain model for one of the season's most successful debutantes. A quaint thing it is, of white organdy with a full, flaring skirt down to her toes. White silk embroidery decorates the skirt lavishly and widely around the knees, and is repeated on the sleeveless bodice, running clear up on to the narrow white shoulder straps that top it. A twisted sash of pale blue taffeta ribbon is finished with a butterfly bow in the back, in which are caught two large white artificial flowers.

One of the newest ideas in sport frocks is a simple little straight line dress of white Turkish toweling, with a pattern of diagonal blue stripes. It has a suggestion of a flare to the skirt and is made for wear on the beach over one's bathing suit. It is sleeveless and has the low cut back of a bathing suit. Since suntan is no longer desirable, these dresses all provide protection for the shoulder blades and the upper arms by means of tricornered squares of colored silk crepe tied at the shoulder. They also include fairly wide leather belts.

On Icy Days Milder Climes Look Good to Chicago Folk

Would you like to have a winter vacation and where would you like to go? An inquiring reporter roamed the loop asking that question and this is what he found out:

L. W. MAHONY.

L. W. Mahoney, 108 Girard avenue, Wilmette, a real estate broker, votes for a winter vacation. "I once spent a very enjoyable vacation in Florida and Cuba during April," he said, "and, since you ask me, I would love to be down there right now. You're out of doors all day long down there, with interesting scenery all around."

Voting with Mr. Mahoney on the winter idea is Miss Alice Strohacker, 3533 South Seeley avenue, a telephone operator, but she differs with him on selection of the vacation spot: "I know I would like to go to California — right now," she said. "I like cold weather if I'm dressed warmly, but I'd rather not have to dress warmly. Since I have to stay in Chicago, I'd like it better if we didn't have to wait so long on cold corners to get on a street car."

ALICE STROHACKER.

A. F. Peterson, 1731 Balmoral avenue, a salesman, declares they're both wrong. Said he: "Give me a summer vacation, northern latitudes. The summer is the natural time to take a vacation. If one is free to go where one wills, and when, a sojourn in the south is all right. But for the average man of the north a summer vacation is best. Vacation during the hot weeks is real relief."

A. F. PETERSON.

"Give me the winter vacation," said Thorpe Boyd, of the Buena Park hotel, newspaper editor. "Most of the important holidays come in the winter and most men like to spend their time then with their families and friends; that's why I'd prefer a winter vacation, anyway. I spent one whole winter in Arkansas and the weather was certainly in pleasing contrast with that of this cold, gray north. It's necessity that keeps me in the north these days."

THORPE BOYD.

All of which seems to indicate that in the wintertime when bitter winds blow a great number of Chicagoans think with longing of places where breezes are gentle and sunshine means warmth.

Miami Gives the Figures on Its Climate in Winter

Miami, Fla., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Miami's winter climate is 10 to 20 degrees warmer than that of Nice, Rome, Madrid, Cairo and Algiers, according to statistics compiled here. The greatest annual range between the warmest and coolest months in Miami is 14.4 degrees. The sun shines 310 days of the year. When the thermometer gets down to 50 degrees Miamians think a cold wave has hit them. The average January temperature in Miami is the same as the average June temperature in Atlantic City.

CALENDAR OF SPORTS FOR WINTER SEASON AT LEADING RESORTS

GAY HAWAII NOW IS ONLY SIX DAYS OUT OF CHICAGO

Boat Trains Speed Up Trip to Islands.

Hawaii in winter is every travel dream come true — music, romance, moonlit nights under swaying coco palms; luaus [native feasts] where one dips up poi with his fingers and is dared to eat raw devilfish, esteemed a great delicacy by Hawaiians.

Nightfall comes without the familiar mainland chill. One sits for hours in a blossom scented park listening to the crooning of native melodies. In a patch of light where the moon breaks through the palms grass skirted maidens may be seen in the rhythmic gyrations of the native hula. In such moments one understands the lure that brings the same visitors to the islands year after year.

Boat Trains to Speed Trip.

Their popularity as a fashionable resort will result this season in a conspiracy against winter on the part of several transcontinental railroad systems in coöperation with two west coast steamship companies.

Both trains are in the plot. This idea in de luxe tourist transportation offers a means of escape from winter to the sunny, springlike clime of semi-tropical Hawaii. The islands thus will be within seven days of New York City and six days of Chicago under the fast through schedules of the all Pullman boat trains. Connecting with ocean grayhounds either at San Francisco or Los Angeles, one will speed in record time to Honolulu harbor.

When It's Winter in Chicago.

While stay at homes in the middle west are struggling with snow and icy winds, visitors to Hawaii are acquiring sun tan on Waikiki's coral beaches. They motor to scenes of beauty and grandeur, such as the Pali of Nuuanu. They play golf at Waialae, where every hole is a copy of some famous hole in Scotland, Bermuda, or the leading mainland courses of the United States. Or they go to Oahu Country club in historic Nuuanu valley and tee off into a rainbow.

Honolulu has an agreeable year 'round climate, with a low temperature of 70 degrees or a high of 80 degrees. The air and water at Waikiki vary only a degree or two from being the same temperature throughout the year.

All summer sports are enjoyed during the gay winter and spring flower season: golf, tennis on surfaced or turf courts, polo, surfing, swimming, deep sea fishing, archery, badminton, bowling on the green, or mountain hiking, as the spirit moves you.

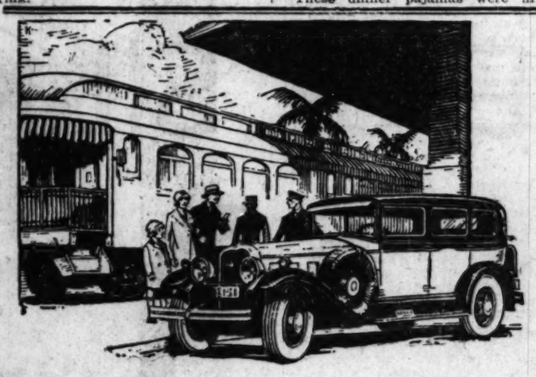
Riding "Waikiki's white horses" is an exhilarating sport, rushing in to the shore on the crest of a huge wave at thirty miles an hour. Either a surf board is used by the athletically inclined or an outrigger canoe captained by a bronzed Hawaiian, trained and skilled to catch every wave.

LUCERNE-IN-QUEBEC PLANS OBSERVANCE OF HOLIDAY SEASON

Christmas and New Year week at Lucerne-in-Quebec will mark the inauguration of what is intended to be a traditional observance of the holidays there. The program will begin on Dec. 24 with carol singing by the children of His Majesty's chapel in London, England, now visiting Canada by special permission of the duchy of Lancaster.

A medieval pageant will be staged on Christmas day, with the ceremonious bringing in of the yule log and the "Boar's Head Carol" as observed at Queen's college, Oxford. Court dances of medieval times will be given on Dec. 26, and a series of folk dances on Dec. 27.

New Year's eve will be featured by a carnival of music and dancing. All during the week the usual winter sports will be in progress, on the mile long, flood lighted bob sled run, the toboggan slide, ski trail and skating rink.



A Motor Car Awaits You in California!

NATURE IN ALL ITS MOODS: THAT IS CALIFORNIA

Traveler Will Find There What He Seeks.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.

California, considered only as a travel experience, is a land of many moods and tempers. It reaches from Oregon to Mexico and from the sea to the high Sierras, embracing in its regal domain as wide a variety of climate and topography as may be found on this continent.

What part of California seems to strike the note of romance or reality depends a good deal upon the beholder. Certainly, it is not to be found in artificial Hollywood, or in the big standardized towns, but rather in the sunny old countryside that will soon become green with the winter rains, along the old trails of the Spaniards or the Russians, or in the abandoned mining towns of the foothills that seem to step out of a Bret Harte tale.

State of Great Variety.

You may find in California what you are prepared to find, for all except the mountain country is open in winter. There are lazy, tropic spots to be found along the dreaming ocean, and keen upland trails among the pines and manzanita, dance halls, or heroic climbs.

The entrance from the north is a rather abrupt change from the thick spruce forests of Oregon to a wild, open, and lonely country dotted with black buttes and lumber and cattle towns.

Old Mount Shasta is the monarch of this landscape, lifting its white head, where a snowstorm may be seen raging in summer time, more than 14,000 feet above the surrounding plains. You may climb this in imagination, leaning back in the comfort of the observation car, for the train takes several hours in winding around the mountain.

Rumors of a Wild Tribe.

Between the railway and the ocean lie a vast, unexplored country, with virgin forests and, it is rumored, a remnant of a wild tribe still living there. Ishi, a primitive man, was caught there a few years ago, and lived four years in civilization, instructing the white man in his strange theories of the universe and God. You may take a side trip from one of the cities along here through the cuts in the coast range and come out upon the smooth Pacific highway.

The highways wind through gulches, where miners are still hunting for gold, up over the range, through Trinity forest, and down into the redwood country. In this part of California lie one of the grand sights of the nation, the giant sequoia groves, with trees thousands of years old, hundreds of feet high, and twenty to thirty feet thick.

Climate Is Just Right.

The climate here is exactly what these trees need, and they have been developing in beauty and strength since the days of the Old Testament patriarchs. The fogs from the ocean mingle with the sunlight in keeping their tops green in the deepest chemistry of nature. Giant ferns grow also in this country, and its rivers, emptying into the sea, are famous for steelhead fishing, one of the greatest sports known to rodmen.

Traveling south in the Sacramento valley again, the orchard country begins, and this merges into the delta land around Sacramento, where Japanese toil in the rich soil and produce delicacies for the San Francisco market. Near here is the site of Sutter's mill, where gold was first discovered, and from here one may branch east into the foothill country, the land of the old stage coach and the heathen Chinee, and the vigilantes.

Into Feather River Canyon.

The Feather river canyon offers a fine trip into a little known country, and one may take a trail here that leads through national forests to the peak of Lassen, the only active volcano in the United States. They will show you where they swept the volcanic ash from the porch during the last eruption, and you listen for the rumblings and the grumblings in that land of devils' cauldrons and witches' pots of gray mud, boiling lakes, and boiling streams, flowing next to one of icy cold.

From Sacramento you may take a trip down the broad bosom of the river to the bay country, Oakland and San Francisco. Old Californians say this is the real California, and there is much amusement expressed over the mushroom growth in the warmer lands to the south. But Oakland and San Francisco, a center of a population of more than a million, are reaching out for a place in the sun, too, and have great visions of industrial growth.

Many Scenes of Beauty.

The quiet, oak dotted campus of the University of California may be visited here, with its campanile, its Greek theater, and halls of learning. Across the bay lies Marin county, and in the back country is Mount Diablo and Jack London's Valley of the Moon." The walnuts grow here and from Diablo you may look across the great central valley on a clear morning and see the sun rise over the white Sierra barricade.

Great oceans of white drifting fog roll in behind you, perhaps hiding the base of the mountain, for the ocean governs this temperature, keeping it about the same winter and summer. In the winter it rains; that is the only difference. In the summer the trade winds blow and the fog rolls in so thick that you can taste it if you put out the tip of your tongue.

Across the Bay—Hikers' Paradise.

Marin county, across the bay from San Francisco and Oakland, is a paradise for hikers and country lovers, week-enders, winter or summer. Every Saturday afternoon the year round you may see the ferry boats disembarking loads of boys and girls, men and women, of all ages, with knapsacks and stout sticks, bound for the trails back of Mill Valley that lead to Steep Ravine and Bolinas.

They may camp along the ocean or in the hills, and hundreds have cottages tucked away in some secluded valley where they live close to the sand and the trees. The favorite climb is Mount Tamalpais, which rears its green crest 2,586 feet above the Golden Gate. There are several trails up and a tavern at the top for rest and food. Or there is a cog railroad for those who do not want to climb.

San Francisco is a city of charm and character. Frank Norris captured it in "McTeague" and in "Blix," and there have been many who have sung of its seven hills since the days when the gold kings lived on Nob hill and the vessels came around the horn with New England household furniture, taking hides for Boston on the way back.

From the old ferry building at the foot of Market street to Land's End out by the Cliff house it is a city of memory and tradition, yet charged with vitality and new growth. Its sky line is more imposing than it was before the great fire and earthquake. A few vacant lots still hold the ruins of that giant catastrophe, testifying to the tenacious love and power of the people who made these new towers rise.

A winter day here may be warmer than a summer day in the east. On some days in midwinter the winds from the warm ocean current drive away the fog and cold from the interior, and one swelters in woolen clothes. Normally, however, the temperature is about 50 or 55.

Home of President Hoover.

To the south is the peninsula country, where the wealthy heirs of the old gold and railroad kings and the newly rich have built great estates in the sheltered hill country back of the ocean. Here lies Palo Alto, home of another great university, the dream of Leland Stanford come true, and also the home of President Hoover. In all his wanderings and official life elsewhere, he has kept here the home that he loves, on a hill overlooking the red roofs of the university.

South from here along the coast is a highway that leads to the gates of Mexico, crossing the Tehachapi range that crosses the California desert to divide north from south.

The mountains to the east must be left out of the winter picture, unless one cares for a winter sports resort. The lovely valleys and the trout streams, the trails into the lost country that lies back of all the mountain passes, are snowbound until June. Even the prospectors come out to sit around the stove in town, while the hunters and trappers go forth for game.

Trail of the Old Missions.

From San Francisco south you may follow the trail of the old missions, which mark the path the Spanish priests took in coming into this country from old Mexico in the days when the colonies of the Atlantic seaboard were beginning to think of independence.

The padres have left an indelible mark on the culture of California and their mission houses of adobe, the interior work done in quaint Indian colorings, are still standing. The oldest mission is at Santa Barbara, where the almond orchards blend into the hills and the desert, and the playgrounds of the millionaires dot the sea coast. There are white breakers here and an ever blue sea, soft, balmy breezes, and luxury.

All suggestion of winter is left behind as you travel south, along the ocean highway, through the beanfields of Ventura, the orange groves of Redlands, into the Los Angeles district. This county of Los Angeles is a principality within the empire, a great agricultural community, with many fine towns, all criss crossed by rail and bus lines leading into the capital of the southland, the City of Angels.

It is said to be a city of ex-Iowans, in its favor, if anything. Los Angeles means something in the American development.

It is a place where thousands, hundreds of thousands, have found their dreams of comfort and open air life realized, where the cold hard winters of the middle western farms and bleak New England climate are forgotten, where they can reach out and expand their souls, and have an arch of blue over them, and hear the songs of birds, and take supper out in the yard.

It is America born again. In their new youth they have built 40 golf clubs in the city and suburbs and, more recently, 200 miniature golf and outdoor driving courses. Bridle paths circle the city. There are long piers where you may sit in the sun and fish all day and think of the old swimming hole in Indiana. There is rowing in the city parks and seven miles of beach.

Mount Lowe may be reached by train and cottages are waiting for a week-end stay. Mount Wilson is another tourist trip and here one may see the observatory and perhaps observe the efforts of the scientists under Dr. Albert A. Michelson in measuring the speed of light in traveling from one peak to another.

There is much here in an educational way. Pasadena, where they have a rose festival every winter, has its Huntington library with one of the nation's finest collections of sculpture and books. The University of Southern California is here and dozens of religious institutions have sprung up in this friendly soil.

A few hours' journey and one is in San Diego, an older city of great charm and dignity, and then across the plains a few miles and the muddy Rio Grande marks the boundary of Mexico. The west coast of Mexico is worth a travelogue by itself, for it has only been opened to railroad travel a few years and offers a winter trip of unrivaled beauty.

A VILLAGE STREET IN OLD MEXICO

Burros, adobe houses, ancient stone walls, and a mountain background form a picture that largely explains why Mexico is steadily drawing larger and larger numbers of visitors across the border from the United States.

AWAIT TEST RUN OF NEW ATLANTIC PASSENGER SHIP

Shipping circles are awaiting with interest, in view of the many revolutionary changes embodied in her construction, the Atlantic trial run of the new 42,500 ton liner Empress of Britain, recently launched by the prince of Wales. It is designed for a five day run or less between Quebec and Southampton.

The Empress will likely be placed in service a year from now as a world cruise vessel, if arrangements can be satisfactorily completed at the various ports of call for berthing. So large is this ship that three standard sleepers can be placed in any of its three oval funnels, with ample clearance.

All the woodwork is in natural teak. The latest electrical equipment is used throughout, and the kitchens are expected to create an unusual amount of attention. The Empress of Britain is 730 feet long and 97½ feet wide, and it will have a capacity of only 1,100 passengers. The public salons are decorated by famous English artists, and at Quebec a new dock is being built at Wolfe's Cove, as well as a tunnel through the mountain, in order to provide complete facilities for passengers and cargo. The ship is rated at about 24½ knots, but is expected, when broken in, to exceed this speed.

Artist to Lead Chicagoans on 18 Day Trip Into Mexico

Ancient Mexico and modern Mexican art have focused the attention of Chicago's globe trotting artist, Dudley Crafts Watson. On Jan. 9 Mr. Watson, who already has guided tours of artists and art lovers through Norway and through Spain, will set out for the republic across the southern border at the head of a group of about 100 persons. The trip will last 18 days and will be directed by the Travel Guild under the auspices of the Art institute.

DUDLEY CRAFTS WATSON.

En route the Chicagoans will spend a day in St. Louis, where they will be guests at a special exhibit. Another day will be reserved for a trip to the art museum at Dallas, where the various collections will be viewed and discussed by Director Watson. The Chicago party will travel in a special train, arrangements having been made to take the American lounge car and dining car with them as far as Mexico City, to insure the best of service.

To See Riviera Murals.

Although the Mexican border will be crossed, both going and coming, late at night, it will not be necessary for customs officers to disturb the members of the party by going through their effects at this time. Customs officials will board the train some distance below San Antonio to perform their duties before dark, and similarly on the return trip, will make their inspection between Monterey and the border.

One of the main objectives of the tour will be the inspection of the work of the Mexican artist, Riviera, at Mexico City. Riviera is called one of the most prolific artists of contemporary times. The great murals in the patio of the ministry of education building in the Mexican capital are considered the best examples of his work, but there is also a noteworthy collection at the village of Chapingo, in the chapel of the National University of Agriculture.

Other Places to Be Visited.

Among the wonders that will be shown the Chicago party in the Mexican capital will be the Xochimilco or floating gardens, which accurately interpreted means "place where flowers are." According to legend, the tribes of Mexico in ancient times were compelled to build a new city because of warfare among them. They were warned by their gods to watch for an eagle with a snake in his beak, and to build the city where he settled. They perceived the eagle and followed the bird, but it alighted on a rock in the midst of a lake on the present site of Mexico City.

The Indian thereupon drained the lake and built their homes in this wonderfully beautiful plateau, surrounded with mountains, which has been called the most beautiful site in the world.

There will be other trips in and near Mexico City for the group, including one to the famed Shrine of Guadaloupe, the Great Pyramids of the Sun and Moon, the stadium, bull ring, Chapultepec Heights, Aztec temples, Chapultepec castle, the White House of Mexico, and numerous others.

DESERT BLOOMS AND BECOMES A WINTER GARDEN

Fun Waits in Arizona and Southern California.

No region has attained popularity in a shorter time than has the "Garden of Allah," desert winter resort area of Arizona and southern California. Almost unknown three years ago, it has inspirited the winter vacation idea in thousands of people.

Men and women who formerly passed through the winter without thought of taking a holiday away from home, now yearn for the land of the orange and oleander as soon as the snow begins to fly. Eagerly they look forward to the playgrounds around El Paso, Juarez, Tucson, Chandler, Phoenix, Indio, Palm Springs, and Agua Caliente, the latter in old Mexico—playgrounds where a desert has been transformed by irrigation and now blossoms.

Shortly after Christmas the exodus will begin.

Mountain Scenery, Too.

In sports and amusements this land is without a parallel. There are twelve winter resorts within the confines of the Garden of Allah—incidentally, the only balmy resorts in America whose attractions are enhanced by the grandeur of mountain scenery. It has, too, dozens of old time cattle ranches which have been modernized and converted into places of rest and recreation.

Courses and courts for all usual sports, such as golf and tennis, are available at these resorts and many of the ranches, and there are fields for polo and other games not quite so common. Picnics in the haunts of the southwest's vanished races are popular, as are also the evening hops at the luxurious hotels and the excursions across the Mexican border.

Many visit this country to enjoy the unusual sports which the thinly populated regions make possible, big game hunting for example. Mountain lions, bear, deer, lobo wolves, coyotes, bobcats, and wild hogs fall to the guns of the hunters, and there are many quail, ducks, and rabbits. Range riding, under cowboy tutelage, "real rodeos which tenderfeet may join as "chuck wagon" guests, and the Indian fêtes are among the interesting features.

Water Sports Available.

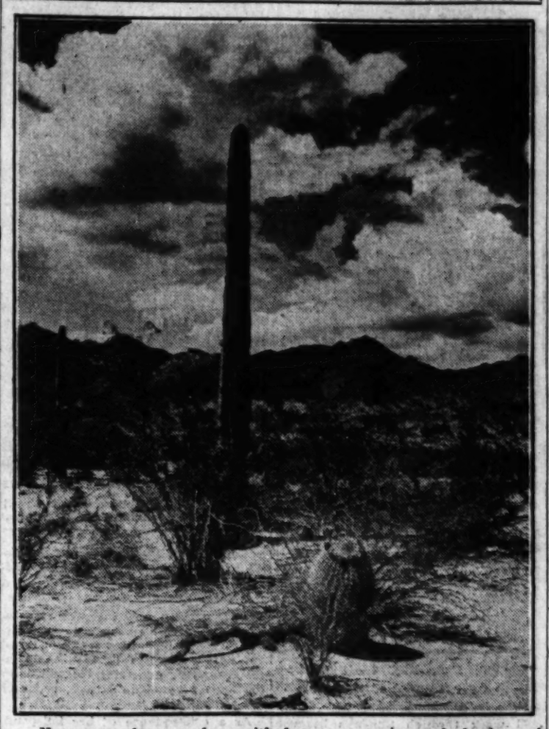
Those who enjoy water sports find swimming pools at many resorts and the lakes bordering Apache trail provide excellent fishing, rowing, motor boating, and sailing. Salt water is also available. Agua Caliente, Coronado, and San Diego are on the Pacific coast, there, too, and the Indian villages, the Mexican adobes, the cliff dwelling, and the old Spanish missions. They are as much in evidence today as ever.

The sky is seen as through a prism. All the reds, blues and yellows are there, and its combination tints range from palest rose to salmon pink, from the most delicate amethyst to darkest purple. The desert and its flowers reproduce the tints of the rainbow—in fact, one plant family alone, the cactus, produces blooms in nearly every hue.

The giant Sahuaro, watchman of the dunes, puts forth a white flower, beautiful in its waxen purity; the flower of the Barrel cactus is lavender; the ocatilio bright red; the cholla yellow.

Whether it be by nature's suggestion or otherwise, color is noticeable even in the assemblies of people which gather from time to time. The Mexican and Indian love of bright colors is everywhere in evidence.

ARIZONA THE PICTURESQUE



Nature set the stage here with desert, mountains, and clouds—and colors the camera could not reproduce. Bright reds, blues, and yellows and startling combination tints decorate the land of the Apache trail and the Cariso gorge. The tall, pillarlike growth is a giant Sahuaro, called "the watchman of the dunes." In the foreground is a Barrel cactus.

SOUTH AMERICAN TRIPS AVAILABLE TO MODEST PURSE

Before you decide that South American travels would cost too much for your purse be sure that you have the latest rates from travel companies, which are continually changing. A recent folder discloses moderate totals for the various cruises, most of which are now planned as "all expense tours."

While it depends upon the places one desires to visit, the cost of a trip will not be prohibitive, in view of the variety of tours offered by west coast lines, several of which can be had for $250, these being of from two to three weeks' duration and including all expenses. East coast trips average slightly more.

Galveston Dines on Fresh Strawberries in December

Galveston, Tex., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Residents of Galveston now are enjoying fresh strawberries with cream and strawberry shortcake as part of their daily fare. Truck farmers in this vicinity rushed the season here by bringing the berries to the fall market, many shipments arriving in time for the Thanksgiving trade. The record for the first yield is claimed by R. L. Wilson, wealthy farmer of Alvin, whose first strawberry patch was ripe on Nov. 9. According to Ira C. Plummer, government meteorologist, bright sunshine during the last six weeks, coupled with continued mild temperatures, helped to bring about the early strawberry crop.

CUBA CHRISTENED 'LOVELIEST LAND' BY MR. COLUMBUS

Nature Bounteous in Its Gifts to Island.

"This is the loveliest land that human eyes have ever seen!"

It was Christopher Columbus who spoke, and it was Cuba that he meant. The exclamation is said to have burst from him as he discovered the island on Oct. 28, 1492. Of recent seasons the modern world is giving evidence that the fascination of Cuba has not diminished—rather increased. It grows more popular each winter season.

The island enjoys almost perpetual springtime. The sky is a bright blue, the air clear and invigorating. The azure of the sky has been embodied in the national flag as typical of Cuba. There is no sudden shifting of seasons, the trees retain their foliage throughout the year, and the fields never lose their verdure. The Cuban people are frank, cordial, and hospitable to the stranger.

Island Befriended by Nature.

The visitor is surprised and charmed as his ship approaches the coast of Havana through the beautiful, intensely blue sea, almost the color of indigo. Nature has endowed and enriched this island and filled it with her treasures.

The first object to meet the gaze of the voyager is the vague silhouette of the Pan de Matanzas, one of the notable mountains of Cuba, so named because of its sugarloaf shape; then the city of Havana comes into view, scintillating in the sunlight. A little later one sees the Gothic tower on the Church of the Sacred Heart, then Morro castle with its lighthouse, the most frequently pictured in the world; next, some of the highest buildings.

The pink haze that seems to envelop everything gradually clears away and the voyager sees the white houses along the Paseo del Malecón, the presidential palace, the Maine monument, and the monument to Gen. Antonio Maceo, the green and gray fringe of the Paseo de Martí, and finally the harbor of Havana.

The Charm of "Old Havana."

Once in port, one discovers the enchantment of the section known as "old Havana," with is historical and architectural reminders of bygone times—houses, plazas, castillos, forts and walls, recalling the city founded by the lieutenant-governor of the island and captain of the royal armies, Don Diego Velasquez de Cuéllar.

This ancient part of the city contains the narrow and tortuous streets typical of primitive Spanish towns, such as Sevilla, Granada and Toledo. They typify old Spain so faithfully that on several occasions they have been used by motion picture companies in filming scenes supposed to have taken place in the venerable cities of the mother country.

Here the visitor will find the most antiquated houses of Havana, of the purest colonial aspect, with their ample portals, thick walls, the coats of arms cut in the stone above the door, the vestibules, the central patios, the immense salons and the spacious rooms, the bay windows, turned wooden balusters and ceilings of strong mahogany or cedar beams—remains of a splendor that has passed away. Also there are to be found the tiny huts, of capricious and irregular shapes, which house the poor.

Oldest of Havana's many interesting forts is "La Fuerza," whose history is intimately connected with the famous conqueror of Florida, Hernando de Soto. In 1538, with the title of "adelantado" [governor] of Florida, he was given the government of the island "Fernandina de Cuba" so that he could there provision his expedition for the conquest.

When he arrived at Santiago he found the town in a panic on account of a recent assault and sack by French pirates, who, dissatisfied with the booty obtained, moved on to Havana, which they also laid waste, sailing away before the authorities could organize for defense. In view of these occurrences, De Soto petitioned the king for funds for the fortification of Havana, and sent men from Santiago to build the Castillo de la Fuerza.

The fort El Morro, or "Los Tres Reyes," was begun in 1589 by Engineer Juan Bautista Antonelli, and was finished in 1597. It stands on a high bluff on the coast of the harbor entrance, and overlooks the city and neighboring beach.

Modern City Beside Ancient.

Although the thick wall that formerly enclosed the city has disappeared, the visitor, however little he may observe, will notice the difference between the old Havana, crouching behind its bulwarks, and the new Havana that has attained so great a growth.

Wide streets and avenues run between massive structures in the new city. High modern buildings stand out neat and clean beneath the sunshine, forming a striking contrast with the little gray stone houses, relics of the past.

As a consequence of her independence and her close political, commercial and industrial relations with the United States, Cuba has become rich in every branch of activity.

Havana Sets Its Clocks by This

At 9 o'clock each evening this ancient cannon atop Cabanas fortress across the bay booms out the hour in a thundering report and all in the Cuban capital who have doubts about the accuracy of their timepieces take this opportunity to correct them. [Courtesy of New York Central Lines.]

CHRISTMAS CIGAR ORDERS FLOODING TAMPA FACTORIES

Tampa, Fla., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Tampa cigar factories are deluged with orders for the Christmas trade. Many will work through Sundays because of the late demands. Reports from all over the country indicate that the Christmas business will be as good and perhaps better than last year.

There is a distinct atmosphere of the old world in Ybor City, the Spanish quarter and cigar center of Tampa, quaint coffee shops and Spanish restaurants permeated with the aroma of Cuban coffee and appetising Spanish dishes—bright eyed senoritas and sleek haired Spanish lads—old Spanish houses with barred windows and balconies, suggesting moonlight serenades—and many cigar factories, out of which at closing time pour streams of cigarmakers.

ALAMO DRAWS MANY TOURISTS TO SAN ANTONIO

Other Attractions Also Appeal to Visitors.

If there were nothing else to claim attention in San Antonio except the Alamo, it still would be the destination each winter season of its usual throngs of visitors.

For the historic old building where Davy Crockett and his loyal band of followers stood by their guns to the last in defense of Texas liberty, is worthy of its fame both esthetically and sentimentally.

San Antonio has plenty of other attractions and assets to insure the winter resorters a healthful and a lively visit, however. It combines the atmosphere of the ancient with that of the modern, from its old Spanish missions, where services still are held, to the modern, sightly business buildings of the downtown streets.

Copies of the latest styles from Paris or New York can be glimpsed in the business and residence sections, yet at night senoritas dance in native costume in the Mexican quarter, to the tune of strumming guitars. A versatile and an enchanting place, is San Antonio.

Sportsmen and artist alike enjoy the city, for what the "dude" ranches in the district cannot supply in the way of outdoor activities, is at hand in the city proper, on its golf links, its tennis courts, in its swimming pools, or on its bridle paths.

As for the artistically minded, they have only to breathe the fragrance of the oleander trees and to glimpse the myriad luxuriant blooms along the tree bordered avenues to find inspiration for a painting or a poem. Nor are there any reminders of a northern winter to distract their minds and intrude upon their dreams.

JACKSONVILLE PLANS NEW BRIDGE TO LINK CITY AND ITS BEACHES

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Plans are being pushed for a new bridge across the St. Johns river at Jacksonville. Property holders of Duval county will vote on a proposed $6,500,000 bond issue for the bridge on Dec. 16.

If approved by the property holders, the new bridge will provide another crossing of the St. Johns river and another connecting link between Jacksonville and its beaches.

Like the present St. Johns river bridge, the proposed new structure will be a toll bridge if erected. Tolls will be used to retire the bridge bonds.

MIAMI, WINTER MECCA, TO HAVE A BUSY SEASON

Sports of All Kinds on City's Program.

When Miami styles itself the winter resort of the world, who is there to dispute the title? At least as far as numbers go, the humming city on Biscayne may be conceded the greatest winter colony in any part of the globe.

Long ago this Florida community took stock of its resources as word of its natural assets began to drift up north, and decided to make a bid for northern favor by providing, as far as man could, all the mundane conveniences and comforts to which the traveling public ever has been alert. Aided by its climate, its scenery, its latitude and longitude and most of all, its nearest site, Miami now reaps the reward of its human and its natural advantages.

Mecca for Northerners.

Yearly the northerners pay tribute to this gay capital, heading for Miami as droves when the winds begin to wail through naked branches and the sleet and snow drive down mercilessly from the arctic regions. There on the sunbaked sands, with blue waves slapping musically on the beach before them, with gay striped sun umbrellas and vivid bathing costumes lending color to the best of all possible worlds, they lie and sigh, content.

Every day and hour contains its own diversion, for of all things, Miami understands best its guests' need for amusement. Paris at the height of its winter season, Atlantic City in the summer, New York, Chicago and the cities of ancient Spain, all have contributed toward the diversions offered. To say nothing of the brands peculiar to the country and the advantages it offers.

Archery Revival at Height.

More emphasis than ever before is to be placed this season on amateur golf events. A revival of archery is at its flood, the pastime having been knocking at the door for admittance for several years, thanks to the enthusiasm of the late Glenn Curtiss. This season the fishing and hunting preserves have been extended beyond any used heretofore. Night football is on the cards, with the University of Miami team the center of interest. Officials of the Miami Jockey club at Hialeah Park report that reservations have been made for all the 800 stalls at the track, including those for some of the best known horse owners and racing stables in the country. A 45 day season will open at the track on Jan. 15.

If the visitor prefers watching the greyhounds chase the rabbit around a track, he will find plenty to interest him at the Biscayne, the Miami Beach Kennel club, built by Tex Rickard.

Plenty of Game Fish.

Big game fishing in the vicinity of Miami is acknowledged among the best in the world. In these waters sea fish weighing from 50 to 5,000 pounds, that will carry a line through wild dashes, in circles and leaps, covering a circuitous 500 yards to 50 miles straightaway. Some are less known than the all but extinct okapi of the Congo jungles.

Three of the largest yachts afloat will be seen off Miami the coming season, it has been announced. The Corsair, 254 foot craft of J. Pierpont Morgan; the Orion, 333 foot boat built for Julius Forstmann of New York, and the Nahlin, a 300 foot yacht owned by Lady Yule of England, comprise the trio. The Corsair cost an estimated $3,000,000.

Despite the number of vessels in the waters about Miami, however the resort is anything but exclusively a millionaire's playground. Living quarters to fit any purse are available there, and in deference to the continued talk about hard times, hotel and apartment owners in the city have agreed among themselves to lower their prices during the next few months.

Plan Gala Sports Week.

Near the close of its winter season, the first week in March, the city has in prospect a gala sports week which will furnish the northern visitors with a memorable program to talk about when they are back home again.

A boxing show featuring Tony Canzoneri defending his lightweight crown against Jimmy McLarnin or Mickey Walker is expected to open the show. There will be a water sports carnival at one of the big pools, the $10,000 added money Florida Derby on March 7, and the international four ball tournament from March 8 to 12. On March 5 the promoters plan to have Young Stribling meet either Primo Carnera or Jack Sharkey in another boxing show. One of the two cards scheduled will be a benefit for charity.

Carnival Time Is Coming Again at New Orleans

Crowds of citizens and visitors as large or larger than the multitude pictured above will throng the streets of the Louisiana city during February days and nights to join with spontaneous gayety in the elaborate pageantry of the Mardi Gras festival. [Courtesy of the Illinois Central System.]

English Speaking Police Assist Visitors in Havana

HAVANA, Cuba, Dec. 6.—[Special.]—The trim squad of white hatted and white gloved English speaking policemen who appear every year about this time in Havana have returned to duty again for the season to aid visitors this winter in enjoying this country. The special detail, an innovation during the administration of President Machado, was established for the convenience of visitors who have not mastered Spanish.

VACATIONISTS ARRIVE EARLY FOR PLEASURES OF ST. PETERSBURG

St. Petersburg, Fla., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Boat, train, automobile, and airplane are bringing the hundreds of early winter vacationers into this city as the north winds howl their annual chorus through the northern states.

Always a favorite winter haven with a large portion of those who are Florida bound, St. Petersburg's popularity will be much augmented this season by reason of the greatly improved traffic arteries leading from the metropolitan centers of the Atlantic sea coast and the middle west.

Train schedules have been shortened from such points as New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Chicago, a factor also counted on to bring the greatest total of winter resorters this season. The train time between either New York or Chicago is now 31 hours.

Air travelers find four excellent landing fields available for their use here, with spacious hangars and facilities for the reception and comfort of passengers. There is a large basin equipped to handle arriving or departing seaplanes, in addition to the land planes.

Every type of recreation is available in St. Petersburg except snow sports. Five golf courses, second to none and in first class condition, are getting their seasonal workouts, and proponents of the old Scotch game are gathering here from all sections.

NEW ORLEANS' MARDI GRAS IS HISTORIC FETE

Whole City Makes Merry in Carnival Season.

Imagine if you can the Paris of Louis XVI., Spain at the height of its most romantic era, Venice, Vienna, Rome, London, all the gay capitals of Europe in the days of their greatest gayety and brilliance. Make a composite of all these and transfer it to the streets of a modern American city, and that is what New Orleans is like when the Mardi Gras season reaches its climax on Shrove Tuesday, Feb. 17.

It was on Lundi Gras, the last Monday of the carnival, in 1699, that the gallant French adventurer D'Iberville braved the dangers of formidable palisades that guarded the mouth of the Mississippi. As he lay that evening on the rush covered bank of the river, his camp fires lighted beneath bright southern stars, his thoughts went back to the rout going on that moment in Paris, contrasting his day of peril and labor with that of his gay friends, masquerading in the streets of the French capital.

The next morning—Mardi Gras—he formally took possession of the country where New Orleans now stands, and the first name he gave in Mississippi was in honor of the day, to a little stream—Bayou Mardi Gras, as it is still printed on the map. From that beginning it is not surprising that Mardi Gras should have become so closely interwoven with the history of Louisiana and Mississippi.

At first the celebration was just a simple procession of maskers until 1827, when the first semblance of a tableau was given, an idea which is understood to have come from a Mobile organization bearing the quaint name of "The Cowbellians," and started in 1831.

In 1839 records tell of a second pageant which had as its dominant figure an immense rooster, six feet high, whose stentorian cries and the flapping of whose great wings caused boisterous merriment among the throngs of spectators. It was in 1852 before the success of the carnival was well established.

SUNNY SAN ANTONIO

The Calendar Is Wrong

The calendar says "December"—but it's still Indian Summer in San Antonio! A blue haze veils the hills to the north. Wild geese and ducks long since migrated south to the sheltered coves along the nearby gulf coast. There's a zest and tang in the air, for San Antonio is not in the tropics. And it sometimes rains—but that only means the roses bloom more luxuriantly for Christmas and that February will bring a tapestry of wildflowers!

Wintertime in San Antonio means playtime outdoors....golf, tennis, polo, archery, motoring, fishing, hunting and horseback riding for the energetic....indolent hours of sunning on palm-shaded plazas, if you want to loaf.

Come south to sunny San Antonio, this winter, and laugh at the calendar!

These are just a few of the sport items that the outdoorsman can revel in when he decides to leave old winter behind and get acquainted with the southland. Just call your shots, Mr. Outdoorsman; the south can give you a ticket to any kind of a sport show.

Louisiana for Waterfowl.

Louisiana wins easily as the best playground for the waterfowl hunter. The marshes west of New Orleans, around New Iberia, Abbeville, and Grand Chenier, or those along the Mississippi, above New Orleans, can furnish wonderful sport.

Last season when we hunted at Tallulah, La., we shot geese during the day and enjoyed thrilling coon and possum hunts after sundown. For novelty in the hunting blinds Tallulah trots out waterproof boxes called "coffins" which are placed in the goose country. When no birds are flying and sun is warm the hunter can stretch out for a nap!

In Alabama and Mississippi there is the famous gulf coast region where golf, salt water fishing, horseback riding, turkey hunting, and quail hunting behind well trained setters and pointers can keep any outdoorsman busy all winter. Modern skyscraper hotels rest right on the edge of the fishing grounds down there in the gulf country. You can stroll out of a hotel lobby and be fishing in a couple of minutes.

If You Want Partridges.

Georgia and the Carolinas are noted for their fine bird dogs, because these states have an abundance of "partridges" or Bob Whites to keep 'em busy, and northern sportsmen who want some delightful upland game bird shooting will find it well worth while to spend time there. Not even George Earnshaw, star pitcher of the Philadelphia Athletics and hero of the recent world series, could resist the Carolina bird hunting last season. He stopped off for a week's hunt with Ty Cobb.

Northern sportsmen accustomed to laborious hiking cross country to find coveys of quail will learn a new wrinkle in sport comfort when they try the southern brand of upland game shooting. As a rule either a horse and buggy or a riding horse is used to transport the hunters over plantations where the Bob Whites are found.

The Variety of Florida.

Florida not only offers a 10 ring circus to the outdoorsman, but also adds rodeo, so varied and thrilling are the things which a northerner may do down there with gun or fishing rod. In one week we have had this schedule while near the town of Punta Gorda, on the west coast of Florida. It is typical of the outdoor fun in that state.

First a quail hunt in an automobile with pointer dogs working to horn signals while we rode all day through pine woods and palm tree hammocks; second, a tidewater fishing trip involving wading on a sandbar a la barefoot boy with cheek of tan, and casting for sea trout, ladyfish, and snook; third, fresh water bass fishing for large mouth bass, and last but not least, a duck shoot for bluebills.

As for the quail hunting in some parts of Florida, get ready for a big thrill, Mr. Outdoorsman, because the hunting from a flivver is unlike anything we have in the north. It's a combination of rough riding, excellent dog work, and interesting shooting against a tropical background.

Last year while bagging a few quail near Punta Gorda it was unnecessary to get out of the car until the dogs were on point. And one day the dogs threw us into a fever of excitement by trying to point wild turkeys instead of Bob Whites.

Waters Teeming with Fish.

For the smaller salt water game fishes which can be taken on light tackle, we suggest the waters adjacent to Tarpon Springs, Tampa, St. Petersburg, Sarasota, Bradentown, Punta Gorda, Fort Myers, and Everglades on the west. Here excellent catches of rovallo, sea trout, jacks, redfish, sheepshead, drums, ladyfish, snapper and groupers can be made.

On some of the streams flowing into the gulf, as for example the Miakka, which flowes into the Peace river, one can hook both black bass and rovallo with the same lure. Many of these game fishes, which are abundant along the west coast, can be taken without the use of expensive boats or tackle.

For the angler who would brave the bouncing waves and the wide open places along the gulf stream in order to wrestle with big game fish, three places are suggested:

Miami, which is close enough to the gulf stream to permit of one day trips; Long Key, that charming little spot between Miami and Key West where anglers from all over the continent assemble to fish for sailfish, amberjack, barracuda, kingfish, bone fish and other scrappers of the ocean; and Key West, where any ordinary Waltonian can wear himself out trying to haul in a wide variety of species from tarpon to sailfish.

Famous for Black Bass.

Inasmuch as Florida grows the largest black bass on the American continent, it is no surprise that thousands of fresh water fishermen trek into that state to unlimber their fishing tackle against the bronze backs during the winter and spring months. They grow 'em up to 15 or 18 pounds down there, and thousands of square miles of fishing water awaits the northern bass enthusiast.

Leesburg is a good center for this sport. There are many lakes near that own. Inverness on Tsala Apopka, winter garden on the other Apopka lake, Kissimmee, Lake Wales, Avon Park, Sebring and Okeechobee are a few of the many towns in Florida which are close to fine bass fishing.

Sequel to Successful Shooting

HERE ARE THE OPEN SEASON DATES FOR HUNTING IN SOUTH

Open seasons for hunting game birds in the southern states make it possible for northern sportsmen to combine southern shooting trips with midwinter vacation in the southland.

In Florida the quail season opened the latter part of November and will continue until Feb. 15. The bag limit is a generous one, fifteen birds a day. Louisiana opened its quail season on Dec. 1. The Bob Whites in that state also may be hunted until the middle of February. The North Carolina quail season is from Nov. 20 to Feb. 15.

Mississippi, noted for its turkey and quail hunting, has moved its open season on the gobblers up to April. For two weeks, beginning April 1, northern sportsmen may take to the deep woods to track down the wary turks, which are called up to the hunter by a system known as "yelping," consisting of the broadcasting of a series of notes imitating the hen turkey's call.

Both Louisiana and Mississippi opened their waterfowl seasons on Nov. 1 and will continue them until the last day in January. The season also closes in Florida on Jan. 31.

Dove hunting, one of the popular field sports in several southern states, also is on the open list during January.

AUTO SHIPMENT FOR TOURIST IS POPULAR SERVICE

Judging by the number of inquiries received as to the new plan of shipping automobiles to southern resorts for their owners to enjoy during their stay, the plan has been received with enthusiasm by the traveling public.

It is only necessary to notify the railroad company which inaugurated this system a few days in advance of departure, so that the passenger may have his vehicle shipped ahead of him and awaiting his arrival at destination.

The cost of the service is three passenger tickets in addition to two tickets for individual transportation. In other words, five tickets will take two people south and also take care of shipment of the car.

SUNSHINE RULES ON GULF COAST OF MISSISSIPPI

Miles of Sandy Beaches Fringe Blue Waters.

Follow the Mississippi river southward to where it meets the gulf of Mexico and you will be in that territory known as the Mississippi gulf coast. You can leave the winter bound northern cities shortly after noon of one day and be reveling in the warm tropical sunshine of Gulfland before noon of the following day.

A charming country is this gulf coast region. Out on the blue waters of the gulf pirate craft once weighed anchor. A hundred years ago the tattered black flags of gold hunting buccaneers flapped in the breeze with happy crews in search of golden sunshine. Where daring privateers once buried treasure on sandy shores, young and old now find other treasure —the treasure of health and happiness.

Along the Old Spanish Trail.

For twenty-five miles the gleaming beaches of this winter playground fringe the serene waters of the Mississippi sound. Sheltering them from the winds and waves of the open gulf is a string of wooded islands.

Following the curve of the white sanded shores, from Biloxi on the east to Pass Christian on the west, runs the old Spanish trail, now a splendid hard shelled road. It winds a picturesque route over upland and hollow, skirting the whispering surf for long stretches, then tunneling through sun flecked bowers of overhanging, moss draped oak trees.

Unexpectedly it slips into a quaint old town, dreaming in the sunlight of other days when long cavalcades of armored French and Spanish adventurers passed along this very road. Then, in contrast, comes a busy, thriving city with fireproof buildings, boulevards, street cars, movies and all the up to date appurtenances of the modern American community.

Three Cities of the Gulf.

Biloxi is a modern winter resort with two 18 hole golf courses, fine hotels, shaded boulevards, yacht club and smart shopping district. But the quaint crooked streets and buildings of its earlier days remain unchanged.

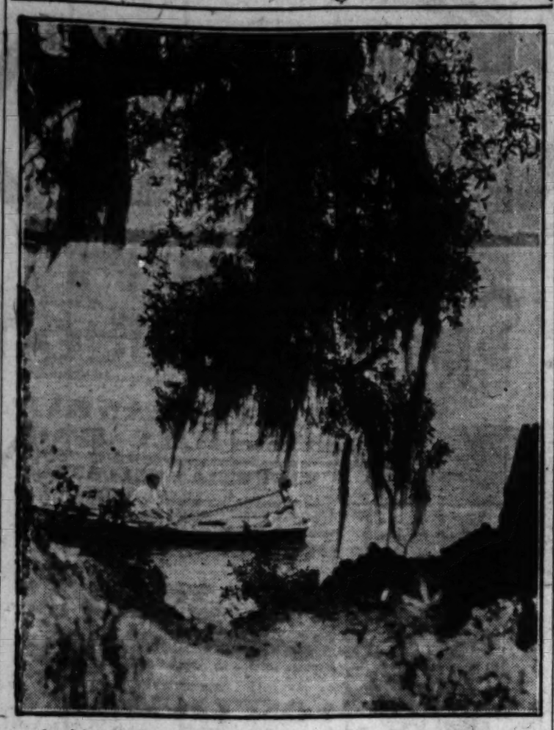
Gulfport, famous for its Satsuma fruit, has grown into a progressive city with a pier a mile long to which come vessels from all corners of the earth. The 18 hole course of the Great Southern club is easily accessible. A long stretch of sheltered strand makes bathing and fishing especially attractive.

Pass Christian, founded in 1699, has the distinction of being the first settlement of white men on the Mississippi and was the nucleus from which New Orleans later grew. Tradition says that adventurous Vikings from Norway landed here at a far earlier date. Boating, fishing, horseback riding and hunting are favorite diversions.

Clean, White Sandy Beaches.

Before all of these towns the clean, white, sandy beach extends—lapped by the warm, peaceful waters of the Mississippi sound, where tarpon, jack fish, speckled trout, red fish, Spanish mackerel and other salt water varieties furnish the finest of sport. Yachting and motor boating are at their best in these safe waters.

Beauties of Boating at Biloxi



A girl, a boat, a placid bay, and, framing all, the majestic moss draped evergreen oaks which grow to the water's edge—what more can man ask for contentment in this city on the Mississippi gulf coast?

Bermuda Offers Adventure of a Stroll Under the Sea

Bermuda is deemed by many the most attractive winter resort on earth. Cold is unknown. Frost, snow, and ice are beyond the imagination of the Bermudian. The winter months are like late May or early June in the north. Days are flooded with sunshine, and the nights are pleasantly cool and comfortable.

Life moves forward there at a peaceful pace, quietly and happily, without hurry or confusion. There are no noisy distractions in Bermuda —no rushing crowds, no elevated trains, no motor cars of any sort. Yet there is an abundance of entertainment and recreation, and countless amusements which make the hours and the days speed by as if on wings.

No Worries About Business.

While the rest of the world has been fretting about slack business, the Bermuda islands have remained unaware of any depression. Nobody has been able to advance an adequate reason why this should be so, except that the trade development board there has refused to curtail its advertising program. As a result of this policy—most probably—the increase in visitors by the end of the present season, if continued at the current rate, will amount to 6,000 over last year.

There are no night clubs and no gambling casinos in Bermuda. One can buy there unlimited quantities of every known kind of drink, because of which freedom, it is said, one seldom sees an intoxicated person. There is no boardwalk. Hotels have their grillrooms in which one dances nightly except Sunday.

Something in the Bermuda air seems to make it impossible for one to do without the British 5 o'clock tea—so one sees numerous groups enjoying British tea and Bermuda strawberries and other goodies, in delightful tearooms situated on the water or in the gardens of great hotels. One might suspect that the atmosphere is snobbish and expensive. On the contrary—it is democratic.

You May Stroll on Sea Floor.

Now the visitors to Bermuda also enjoy a different kind of thrill—that of leisurely strolls along the bottom of the sea. Under the auspices of the Bermuda aquarium, any person may rent a diving helmet, which is adjusted over the head, and slip over the side of a boat in ordinary bathing suit for an exploring trip beneath the waters of Harrington sound.

One goes down some 20 or 30 feet, experiencing no discomfort, since the water rises to the chin but the air in the helmet prevents it from getting up farther. There is no danger in the experience. Air is pumped from the shore into the diver's helmet, and through the clear, glassy depths it is almost uncanny to watch a man or woman walking as calmly on the bottom as though pacing down the street. Even to a depth of 40 or 50 feet the movements are easily seen.

WHEREVER YOU GO THERE'LL BE PLENTY OF GOLF

Every Resort Area Has Its Tees and Greens.

BY HOWARD BARRY.

Surely there is no sportsman who pursues his pastime through the changing seasons with the unswerving attention of the golfer. The football fan is capable of two months of sustained devotion in the fall, but along toward the end of November he knots his nerves into one last paroxysm and then gets over it. The baseball addict is called upon for a little more tenacity.

But consider the golfer. He fares forth in the early spring and plays on through the heat of the summer. The leaves of the trees turn to red, then to russet, and finally fall before the November winds, but he will not desert his fairways until a morning comes when he finds them covered with snow.

And it is at this point that he shows the stuff of which he is made—how he differs from the adherents of other games. When the breath of winter blows the golf ball southward, throngs of true knights of the mashie, instead of sitting idle and bemoaning their fate, gather up their favorite clubs and start out in search of what is literally a promised land.

The winter vacation folders promise the golfer many things and even the most discriminating follower of the fairways is not likely to be disappointed. For he has at his disposal a chain of courses stretching from Los Angeles in the west to Pinehurst in the east and southward to the West Indies and other islands of the tropical seas. This sweep takes in Agua Caliente, Phoenix, San Antonio, Dallas, New Orleans, Biloxi, Miami Beach, Jacksonville, Palm Beach, and Asheville.

Chance to See the Masters.

In addition to playing himself, the golfer may see the masters in action at these spots. For this is the grand circuit followed every winter by all the great money players. From tournament to tournament they go, playing here for $10,000 and there for $15,000, the big fellows doing it to keep up their reputations and the little fellows hammering away with the hope that they'll be big shots themselves some day.

Just as the emigrants with their covered wagons used to gather at Omaha and other points before going out in quest of the new country beyond the plains, so now the professional and amateur golfers assemble at San Francisco before starting out on the long swing through the winter tournament circuit.

And just as the trip across the plains brought fortune to some emigrants and trouble to others, so also this trip through the south has given wealth and fame to many golfers [the case of Horton Smith being an outstanding example] and has left others with scarcely carfare home.

Winter Circuit Begins Tomorrow.

The national open match play tournament which ends today has drawn many of the best players to San Francisco. The list of contestants includes Gene Sarazen, Mac Smith, Johnny Farrell, Horton Smith, and many others of their class.

Tomorrow they will pack their bags and set out southward and eastward on a campaign which will not be completed until the last putt has been holed some day next spring at Lakewood, N. J., which is the terminal of the circuit.

MIDGET GOLF TAKES TO SEA; PLAYED ON DECKS OF STEAMERS

Miniature golf has taken to the high seas. Chicagoans who skip off this winter to various ports for a few months of sunshine and warm weather will find the newest deck game ruling the waves just as it ruled last summer on various vacant lots, and this winter in its indoor phase. Although it takes up considerable deck space, that disadvantage is offset by the fact that so many passengers prefer to indulge in the sport and that the course will accommodate many more than the average shipboard game.

CHINA BAFFLES YET FASCINATES THE WESTERNER

Friend of Oriental Land Tells Its Oddities.

Where the Chinese dragon rears its fantastic length, lies the enigma of the Orient. Western civilization and culture have touched, but not affected, this vast, mysterious country whose gods and customs remain its own. A land that lays a spell on those who invade it—a spell that never quite fades. The charm of China is acknowledged but inexplicable.

Many Chicagoans have experienced life there through long sojourns, but probably none is better acquainted with it than Miss Martha Walker, advertising manager at Leschin's. Although thoroughly Nordic, even to blue eyes and ashblonde hair, she might almost be described as a third generation Chinese by adoption.

For her grandfather, the Rev. Wilbur Fiske Walker of Evansville, Ind., now 85 years old, was a pioneer Methodist missionary in China, and her father, Orin de Motte Walker, was born in that country and still lives there—in Peiping, where he is an attorney.

Seven Years in China.

Seven years of Martha Walker's life have been passed at the Peiping home of her parents. She attended school there before being sent back to this country for her college course. Thereafter she returned to China for a time, but eventually determined to come back permanently to her native land and establish herself in the business world.

"It's such a baffling country," she says, "and yet—so fascinating. It exerts a strange influence over you in spite of the things you'd much rather were different there. It is contradictory all around.

"I've often laughed about the impression strangers get when their liner slips into a Chinese port. At first you're delighted to note that there are hordes of small boats thronging about, and that the Chinese men and women in them are holding up their palms to you in the friendliest manner, and chanting something that sounds like 'Come ashore! Come ashore!'

"But just as you've decided that this is a most hospitable gesture, and you're beaming down upon them in gratitude for their welcome, somebody informs you that what they are really saying is 'Cumshaw! Cumshaw!' And that it means they want a tip.

Difficulties of the Tongue.

"Life in Peiping has always been a wonderful experience to me. So many people think the language is difficult, but it comes easily to me, perhaps because I have a natural liking for it. My mother has not.

"There are four inflections of one Chinese word, all of which mean something quite different, and mother just can't get them down pat. One evening when we were having guests for dinner, she told the houseboy to bring a certain dish. He came back with a cup of cornmeal.

"Another time a guest was in the bathroom and through some slip there was no soap there. Mother sent some by a boy, telling him to leave it outside the door. But the words for chair and soap are so similar that she got them wrong, and he carried a chair right into the bathroom. After that father asked mother to confine herself to English.

New China Meets the Old.

"Life in China of late has been considerably affected by the return there of the younger generation of educated Chinese, coming back to their home country all aflame with enthusiasm for the occidental ways of doing things, and determined to inaugurate them at home. But the Chinese who haven't been out of China are not cordial toward any of these things—the ways of their ancestors are plenty good enough for them.

"Such conflicts are bound to make trouble, but they have their funny side also. For instance, the formal dances at the hotels in Peiping are attended by many of the wealthier young Chinese. The boys are extremely proud of their western clothes, their adopted mannerisms, and especially their ability to dance jazz dances. If their dancing partner happens to be an educated Chinese girl, also in occidental garb, that's not strange.

"But when one of these boys gets a partner from among the girls who never have been outside Peiping and tries to teach her the steps, it's ludicrous.

What Fashion Dictates.

"These girls all look like little painted dolls, with their long Chinese coats heavily embroidered in vivid silks and gold, their straight little collars up around their necks, black hair in bangs low on their foreheads, and long eardrops. They wear long, wide trousers and flat soled embroidered slippers to harmonize with the rest of the outfit.

"Streets in Peiping are eternally interesting to me. You can see the strangest sights, and the names of the streets, by the way, help one to learn the language. There is Lantern street, where all the shops are stocked with lanterns of all sorts. And Flower street, where only flowers are sold. Jade street, with its costly trinkets and its cheap ones. And Silver street, which has the most entrancing things for sale.

"There is a thieves' bazaar, by the way. If you go there at 5 o'clock in the morning, you can buy, if you wish, from the stock of things stolen in the city the day before—perhaps even find something you lost.

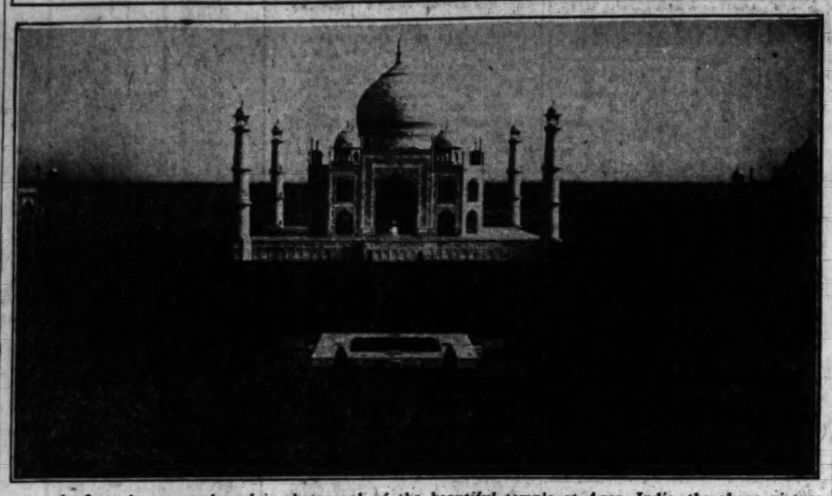
The 'Rickshaw Men.

"Chinese 'rickshaw men wear long loose coats, long white trousers, and at the bottom of the trousers, above their flat, soft slippers, they wind a black cloth around their legs. These puttees, if they could be called that, are always coming undone at the most inconvenient moments, and when the 'rickshaw coolies happen to trip on them, they get some bad falls.

"Recently that happened to my mother when she was out riding—the coolie was tripped on his black puttee and fell, throwing mother out and fracturing her elbow. It's been a mean break, too.

"Some day, of course, I'm going back—in fact, just talking about China has made me homesick."

THE TAJ MAHAL BY MOONLIGHT



At first glance merely a fair photograph of the beautiful temple at Agra, India, the above picture is actually a remarkable camera achievement. It was obtained by George F. Getz Jr. a few years ago when he and a school companion were traveling through India with George Getz Sr., Chicago business leader. They were aboard a special train and were fortunate enough to find the Taj Mahal flooded with moonlight. By request of Getz Sr. the engineer held the train nearly an hour while Getz Jr. "snapped" the photo. It was taken at 10 p. m., by the clear moonlight, and required an exposure of 45 minutes.

EXPERIENCE COUNSELS EARLY RESERVATIONS OF STEAMER CABINS

Only the inexperienced traveler will fail to make his reservations at the earliest possible moment for a trip of any considerable length. Such forehandedness is of particular value if one plans a trip by boat, for comfortable quarters aboard ship are greatly in demand, and those who would avoid an inside cabin without a porthole and the best of ventilation are always most prompt about putting in their order.

It is not necessary to pay your entire passage so long in advance. One merely pays a percentage of it to insure the space being held in the proper name and pays over the remainder of the passage money just before starting.

Cabins on trans-Atlantic liners are engaged months in advance by persons planning trips during the crowded season. Even now reservations are being made for passage during the coming summer and early fall, the purchasers of such space serving their own best interests by obtaining the most desirable quarters for the amount of the passage, while later comers will have to be content with what they can get, even though they pay just as much.

FLORIDA'S ROYAL PALMS IMPORTED FROM WEST INDIES

Thousands who have admired the majestic royal palms in Florida doubtless believed they were "made in America." Such is not actually the case. The species was imported many years ago from the West Indies. They found the climate in their new home so beneficial, however, that they began to flourish almost at once, and their growth was rapid and luxuriant.

OCEAN CRUISES TO "NOWHERE" WIN POPULARITY

Does it seem possible that thousands of persons would join a winter cruise that was going nowhere in particular and didn't care how long it took to get there, provided they got back to their desks under ten days?

That is precisely the attraction of the newest kind of holiday. Three "Nowhere Cruises," comprising 2,136 travelers, were tried out last year by one travel company and proved so successful that this year ten more are scheduled.

Not the least of the fascinations of these trips is the moderate cost, which is kept to a minimum rate of ten dollars a day. The joy of the experience is its restful tempo, especially attractive to harried business men and women who so often burst out with, "O, if only I could get away somewhere for a few days and just rest."

Here they are provided the opportunity to spend a week on a trans-Atlantic liner, enjoying all the comforts of a European voyage with the ship "just loafing along," and therefore lacking the vibration caused when travel is at top speed.

It is expected that during the summer months of 1931 approximately 7,000 persons will make bookings for the summer cruises to Nowhere.

View of a bazaar, or market place, in Tunis, Algeria, one of the countries of North Africa which have become a mecca for winter tourists. Natives in the costumes of centuries' tradition sell their wares beneath the telephone wires of western civilization. In the background is the stately Grand Mosque, erected in 732.

HEALING WATERS OF HOT SPRINGS A PUBLIC TRUST

Reserve Established by U. S. 99 Years Ago.

It's Uncle Sam's. That is the secret of the universal health service of the Hot Springs of Arkansas.

Ninety-nine years ago the tale of the healing waters of the Ozark foothills was told in Washington. Within the year the government had set apart a reservation, comprising four sections of land, upon which these sparkling waters bubbled, and dedicated it as a national sanitarium for all time.

As it is, not only the citizen of average means, but the citizen of no means at all may obtain the full benefits of the healing qualities of the water, for Uncle Sam regulates all bathhouse rates—merely leasing the water privileges to the bathhouse proprietors—and operates a free bathhouse for those who cannot afford to pay for the service.

That the water relieves various forms of rheumatism and other diseases is certain. How it heals is not so well understood. Thousands have gone to the Valley of Vapors on crutches and in due time have laid aside their crutches.

Unfortunately, there are certain kinds of rheumatism which are incurable. For that reason a percentage of the crippled patients who go to Hot Springs full of hope are doomed to disappointment. Hot Springs does not cure the incurable and Uncle Sam does not wish his citizen-patients to get that idea.

From earliest beginnings the story of Hot Springs has been a romantic one. Probably the first white man to seek the water cure, or rather water prevention, was Ponce de Leon. Every one remembers the story of that doughty Spaniard's search for a Fountain of Youth.

It may have been that the tale of the curative waters of the Ozark foothills, filtering through the forests of what are now Alabama and Georgia, from one Indian tribe to another, reached the coast and was responsible.

No city of its size in the world is better equipped to take care of its guests, both sick and well, as Hot Springs. Those who go there to keep from getting sick are greatly in the majority over those who go because they are ill.

The bridle paths, the paved highways, the golf courses and tennis courts, the miniature golf links, and the diverse other attractions are insured their full measure of usefullness.

AUTO RENTAL PLAN IS ARRANGED FOR TOURISTS IN WEST

An announcement of special interest to the owners of automobiles who find themselves continually missing their cars while on vacation comes from one of the railroads serving California and the Pacific coast. Arrangements have been made by this route to have available for the use of the patron who desires it a rented car of any specified make for use while in the west. Cars may be rented through this service for as low as $21 a week.

Reputable automobile rental agencies in California, Seattle, Portland, Tacoma, and Spokane will provide the vehicles according to the territory in which the railroad passengers wish to utilize them. Through the railroad office all details of the transaction may be completed before the journey is started, the car being ready for use as soon as the traveler detrains at his destination. It may be retained for as long as desired.

PARROT TAUGHT TO PRAY.

The parrot which can swear a blue streak has found an antithesis in a parrot at the Isle of Pines which can pray. The Sisters of Charity whose cloister is at Santa Fé own the gorgeously colored bird.

Mediterranean Cruise Takes Tourist to Ports of Romance

Mark Twain once said, while displaying innocence as well as enthusiasm abroad, that it would require a lifetime to see adequately any French cathedral—and even then he would want a little longer.

But through the miracle of modern trans-Atlantic liners and adroitly planned itineraries, it has come to pass that one may cruise the ports of the Mediterranean, exult in romantic island empires, and cross an ocean twice—all within thirty days—and not be rushed.

Thirty Days of Romance.

There is, for example, a special Mediterranean cruise, modest as to cost, yet luxurious as to ship, service, and environment, which occupies just one month between departure from New York and the return there.

In the interim you will have touched at Teneriffe to see its volcanic beauty, its purple cliffs rising sheer from the sea. You will have strolled along streets of patios and fountains and gardens rich in flowers, thrilled over Santa Cruz and its historic cathedrals, and as the ships sets sail again glanced back at the panorama of the Canary islands, jealous of those who need not leave.

Your 30 days will have given you Morocco's Casablanca with its African glamor and the weird juxtaposition of a little Paris of gorgeous esplanades, flower bowered boulevards, sidewalk cafes.

In this month will have been experienced a triumphant entry of the gateway to the Mediterranean, that Gibraltar atop which guns glisten, and a fortress perches. You will have stood at the rail and seen the low green hills back of Algiers coming slowly up to meet you, and then the city itself in sharper detail.

The island of Majorca is next, all white and yellow and cream-pink, where churches sit upon high peaks and patches of flowers mosaic miles of shore! There the melody of Chopin, who lived on this island paradise for a while, is in the very air.

To Monte Carlo and Riviera.

One of these 30 days will have found you sailing to the shores of France and Monaco, on its throne of rock. The ship will be surrounded by yachts, scurrying tenders, and picturesque fishing vessels as it casts anchor off Monte Carlo and the Riviera.

Cannes, Nice, Mentone, the Grande Corniche—memories of which will fill a lifetime—are nearby.

Some of those days will have shown you the Bay of Naples and traces of dead centuries, rich in history; Vesuvius with its diadem of cloud and its dead embers of lava; the pageantry of Pompeii, and much more.

Debutantes Come Into Their Own in Gotham

Last Week Marked Final Rating of Buds.

By Nancy Randolph.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—[Special.]—We are now, of course, in the very midst of the season. Right from Thanksgiving eve the intensive "presentation period" began, and until well after the new year there will be an interminable chain of debutante luncheons, dinners, and dances.

No longer does the season depend on the elders of society. Everything is bound up in the girls who have returned from their schooling abroad and are now prepared to take their rightful places, at a fearful cost to their paters, in the social scheme of things.

However, it isn't all smiles. There are a lot of heartbreaks in the business of making a bow and of presenting a daughter. This week marked the final rating of the girls, and those who attended the first of the junior assemblies at the Ritz-Carlton on Friday are now assured of their social acceptance. As for the girls who were not sponsored for this most important series of dances, they will do their utmost to keep smiling faces. They will appear at dances and fêtes until their season is over and then, unless they make a startling marriage, they will, like old soldiers, simply fade away.

Junior Bid Most Important.

While it is almost always certain that a girl who is elected to the junior league will get her assembly bid and vice versa, it does not follow that it must be so, and in any choice between the two I should be inclined to rate the bid to the junior assemblies as more important. As one girl put it, put it, "One works for the league, but the assemblies carry you on without work."

The junior assemblies are very nice dances where the matrons of society have the privilege of sponsoring one girl, usually their own daughter, as a member of the assembly, and the daughter, in her turn, has the right to ask two young men to attend as her guests. It is the only dance series of the season that starts at the beginning by making sure every girl has a sufficiency of partners. And the young men look upon the junior affairs almost as fearsomely as their sisters. Not to be asked, even as second choice, by one of the season's debutantes is enough to lead any lad to Dan's or Winkle's to drink himself into forgetfulness.

Preliminary in Baltimore.

This week there was a preliminary to the first of the junior assemblies in the famous old bachelors' cotillion in Baltimore, which since I can remember has been held in the Lyric. In fact the Baltimore cotillions have been going on for almost 200 years and the élite of the Maryland city simply frown on any girl who does not secure her bid.

Many Baltimore families have connections with New York society and as a result it has become quite the thing for our girls here to receive bids for the cotillion. Among these who journeyed down this week to attend the dance were Serena Williams Miles, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Miles; Audrey Barret, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Barret; Katherine Riegel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin De Witt Riegel, and Alice Macy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Macy.

The Ritz on Friday was naturally as wild a place as one can imagine. The young folk have not quieted down much in recent years and the only change between the assemblies of a few years ago and today is that all the lads turn up in full evening kit. Top hats and tails are quite the thing now. The dinner jacket is taboo.

Two More Assemblies.

It would be quite too silly to give you the names of all the girls who carried their two cavaliers to the dance and the names of their sponsoring mothers, but among the most important at Friday's dance who will also attend the two other junior assemblies on Jan. 2 and Feb. 6 were Josephine Auchincloss, daughter of Mrs. Charles C. Auchincloss; Florence T. Baker, daughter of Mrs. George F. Baker; Audrey Barret, daughter of Mrs. Cecil Barret; Fredericka Gallatin, sponsored by Mrs. George N. Bell; Edith Betts, daughter of Mrs. Wyllys Rossiter Betts; Lydia Blagden, daughter of Mrs. Francis Meredith Blagden; Priscilla Bliss, daughter of Mrs. Walter Phelps Bliss; Marguerite Brokaw, daughter of Mrs. Howard Brokaw; Natalie Coe, daughter of Mrs. William R. Coe, Theodora Crimmins, daughter of Mrs. Thomas Crimmins, and Mary J. Delafield, daughter of Mrs. Joseph L. Delafield.

Also Elizabeth De Rham, daughter of Mrs. Frederick De Rham; Isabel Gardiner, daughter of Mrs. Winthrop Gardiner; Louise Leeds, sponsored by Mrs. James M. Hartshorne; Doris Havemeyer, daughter of Mrs. Horace L. Havemeyer; Virginia Kernochan, daughter of Mrs. Frederic Kernochan; Penny Le Boutellier, daughter of Mrs. Philip Le Boutellier; Elia D. Milbank, daughter of Mrs. Dunlevy Milbank; Lela Morris, daughter of Mrs. Lewis Gouverneur Morris; Mary Pierrepont, daughter of Mrs. R. Stuvesant Pierrepont; Anne C. Schley, daughter of Mrs. Kenneth B. Schley, and Barbara Truesdale, daughter of Mrs. Joseph R. Truesdale.

No Southward Move.

There has not been the slightest move southward, but there have been a great many sailings and arrivals to and from abroad. Lady Mendl, our one time Elsie De Wolf, having had a most enjoyable six weeks of gayety, departed for her villa, Trianon, at Versailles. The noted Elsa Maxwell, friend of Lady Mendl, is staying with us some time longer, however. The energetic Elsa will not leave until Christmas, which she will spend with her friend, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, in France, whence the former Newport queen does not seem inclined to return.

First Quota of Colonists Now in Palm Beach

Midwest Group Opens Homes for Season.

PALM BEACH, Fla., Dec. 6.—[Special.]—Every incoming train is bringing back its quota of winter residents; every day brings from hotels and clubs announcements of festivities to come; the winter yacht fleet grows steadily; stately homes darkened for months are being thrown open for small hospitalities that soon will grow larger, gayer and more frequent. In short, Palm Beach is preparing to resume her place in the world's society columns.

The holiday season finds a number of better known colonists from the midwest already established in their homes. George A. McKinlock is back from Italy, accompanied from New York by Mrs. McKinlock, who went up to meet him. Mrs. McKinlock and Mrs. Henry R. Rea, however, are leaving again soon for Washington, where, on Dec. 11, they will attend a meeting of Miss Mabel Boardman's national Red Cross volunteer workers' committee, of which they are members. Mrs. McKinlock is also a member of the executive board of the Chicago Red Cross chapter.

Early Comers.

Mrs. Rea has reopened Lagomar, her Ocean boulevard estate.

Vincent Bendix has taken the well known Van Riper home here for the winter. Among other early comers from the Chicago area were Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Hayes, Mrs. Earl H. Deakin and her sons, Mr. and Mrs. H. K. Wells, and Mr. and Mrs. James R. Emery, who spent the summer abroad. Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Fatio (Eleanor Chase) of Oshkosh, Wis., have arrived. Mrs. Fatio spent most of the summer at the Fatio summer home at Old Westbury, L. I. Mrs. Charles Chase, Mrs. Fatio's mother, will spend the winter with them here.

Barclay Warburton Jr. spent most of the week here as the guest of his father preparatory to resuming his round the world airplane trip. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sommers Roche were recent arrivals.

Mme. Louise Homer and her husband, Sidney Homer, have been expected daily to occupy the home they have taken for the winter.

Miss Muriel McCormick will arrive about Dec. 15 and shortly after Christmas will be followed southward by members of the troupe of the Palm Beach Players, Inc., theatrical enterprise, which she will sponsor here.

Arthur Brisbane also is expected to be among the all-season residents.

Notables Expected.

The Palm Beach Anglers and Sports club will be responsible for the appearance at the club's regatta here this winter of the presidents of Ecuador and Cuba with their wives and half a dozen distinguished diplomats, if announcements of the club president materialize.

Sir Thomas Lipton, too, has accepted an invitation to attend the club's third annual regatta, March 21-23, and personally present a replica of the club's $25,000 Lipton cup to the winner of the Lipton outboard race.

The Breakers, center of the resort's most fashionable hotel life, will open Dec. 20. New Year's will see the opening of many of the leading clubs. The Everglades will launch a brilliant season of semi-weekly dinners with its traditional New Year's eve dinner dance, and the Bath and Tennis club will open informally.

When Chicago Was Young

By Herma Clark.

Letters from Martha Freeman Esmond to her friend, Julia Boyd of New York.

Chicago, Aug. 6, 1875.

DEAR JULIA:

We have just come in from a drive in the new victoria. "Uncle John" Bryant of Princeton, Ill., has been spending two days with us and Will wanted to show him the shipping in the Chicago river. At the wide waters, where the north and south branches of the river meet the main stream, there is a lumber market, and here tonight the vessels were docked side by side so closely that there was barely room for a ship to pass on the way up or down stream—a really majestic sight.

Just above Lake street bridge is the Robert Law coal dock and we saw the great schooners "Lizzie A. Law," "Moonlight, "Mocking Bird," and others unloading coal. Below Lake street bridge were a number of "lumber luggers," as Will calls them—the "Ashtabula," "City of the Straits," "Levi Grant," and others whose names I can't remember. One of these boats was called the "Colonel Cook," and Will told us that her name had been originally the "Augusta," but after she sank the "Lady Elgin" off Winnetka in September, 1860, there was so much feeling against her that her owners got a special act of congress or of the legislature, or something of the kind, and had her name changed to "Colonel Cook." The "Lady Elgin" was one of the terrible lake tragedies that is memorable here. I remember writing you about it at the time.

At the State street bridge on the north side of the river we saw an odd sight, a "three master," as the men called it, named "Zack Chandler," with a broom tied to her fore topmast. I asked the reason for the broom and was told it was a challenge to all comers for speed. The "Zack Chandler" had made the trip from Chicago to Buffalo in four days and was very proud of the record. She had made the round trip in two weeks, loaded both times, and Will and Uncle John both thought it most remarkable.

Uncle John is a brother of the poet, William Cullen Bryant, and has written some really good poems himself [or, as Will puts it, "Uncle John is no slouch of a poet"], so we suggested titles for a poem he might write on the sights we had seen on the river. Will's offering was "Zack Chandler Sweeps the Lake," Young Martha thought "Sail On, Good Ship" would be excellent. [I fear Longfellow has anticipated her in the thought, if not the exact words.] My feeble brain evolved two lines as a starter for him:

"Of all the names for boats I've heard,
The sweetest is 'The Mocking Bird.'"

Our visitor has promised to consider these subjects seriously.

I have a new hat which Mrs. Hopson, our famous milliner, copied from an imported model for me. It is for carriage use and the foreign designer of the original christened it "The Queen." The brim is somewhat wider than we have been wearing and is curved upward gracefully on the right side. This upturned brim is caught to the crown with a cluster of three ragged white roses. Fastened underneath the roses are an ostrich plume and two tips. The tips turn toward the front, while the plume is carried around the crown and allowed to fall low at the back. Don't you think it sounds pretty?

Speaking of styles, are the fashionables of New York wearing the flashy hosiery so prevalent here? Young Martha has some dreadfully "loud" stockings which I can't endure, but she says all the girls are wearing them and she must have them or feel out of style. Will cut out a verse from a humorous paper and put it at Martha's plate today. It was really amusing. It ran:

"O, how can I the world defy
Unless my hose is striped?
For, as I go, each gust doth show
My termination biped.
O, dainty foot! O, gaiter boot!
To piety you're shocking.
I ne'er can go to church, for O!
I have no striped stocking."

So many people are out of town the streets look quite deserted. Saratoga has attracted many Chicagoans this summer. I received a letter from Mrs. Eugene S. Pike today from that brilliant watering place. She and Mr. Pike are staying at the Grand Union hotel there and she says that the Jesse Whiteheads, Mr. and Mrs. George M. Pullman, the Nelson Ludingtons, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus N. Eddy, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Kimball, and Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Henderson are all at that fashionable hostelry.

If you should spend any time there later in the month, as you wrote you might, you may see something of these ladies, and I

Sorority and Club to Hold Benefits for Good Fellows

NOTE TO PRESS CHAIRMEN: Starting this week, club notices for publication in The Sunday Tribune must reach the club editor not later than the preceding Tuesday morning.

By Roberta Nangle.

THE GOOD FELLOW spirit grows more contagious daily. Despite the pre-Christmas hustle and bustle in which everybody is inevitably caught, members of clubs and sororities all over the city are finding time to devote their efforts to benefits for THE TRIBUNE Good Fellow fund.

The sound theory of putting social events to philanthropic use is being put into practice with avidity. Clubs who want to raise contributions for the fund need feel no qualms of conscience when they ask their friends for the price of a ticket to a benefit party, since the purchase assures the prospective guest a good time for his money, plus the gratifying knowledge that he is indirectly helping needy families through the winter.

Sorority Gives Dance.

There are two large Good Fellow benefits planned during the next two weeks, one sponsored by the girls of Zeta Sigma Psi sorority and one by the philanthropy department of the Illinois Women's Athletic club. The former is made possible through the generosity of John B. Drake Jr., who is contributing the use of the main dining room and the Avenue of Palms of the Drake hotel for a Good Fellow dance on Wednesday evening. The use of the Drake orchestra, under the direction of Clyde McCoy, is being donated jointly by the Drake hotel and the Kin-a-Way productions.

The important business of selling tickets for the dance is being capably managed by members of Zeta Sigma Psi under the direction of the president, Miss Mary Enright. Each member has undertaken to dispose of a share of the tickets. The entire city has been divided into districts and a captain is responsible for the distribution in each section. At least 1,000 guests are expected and it is hoped that a fund of $3,500 or more will be realized for the Good Fellow fund.

The Bell Printing company is contributing its share to the cause by supplying tickets, announcements and other printed matter without charge. The coöperation of all these groups is proof that the Good Fellow spirit is spreading and that the dance on Wednesday evening will be the means of filling baskets and stockings that otherwise would be empty at Christmas time.

Charity Ball.

The second large benefit is to be a Good Fellow charity ball on Saturday evening, Dec. 20, at the Illinois Women's Athletic club. Mrs. Thomas J. Houston, chairman of the club's philanthropy committee, is in charge of the ball and the entire membership of the club of 3,800 women is assisting under the leadership of the president, Mrs. Bessie Bragg Pierson.

The affair promises to be as brilliant as any of its sort this winter. Mrs. Houston has announced that the thirteenth and fourteenth floors of the lovely club building will be used. In addition to dancing there will be a buffet supper and several members of the casts of current plays and of the opera have been invited to attend. Tickets are being sold at $5 apiece. The affair is open to the public as well as to members.

Among the prominent women who have volunteered to sponsor the event are Mrs. Charles Deering, Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, Mrs. Hayden B. Harris, Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis, Mrs. Rockefeller McCormick, Mrs. Charles S. Peterson, and Mrs. Jacob Baur.

Downtown Clubs

The following department meetings will be held this week at headquarters of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs at 30 West Washington street:

Tomorrow at 10 a. m., state garden department; 10:30 a. m., state education. Tuesday at 10 a. m., public health and child welfare; 10:15 a. m., state literature. Wednesday at 10 a. m., junior membership; 10:30 a. m., second district coöperation with war veterans; 2 p. m., American home.

Exhibition of French Planes Held in Paris

By May Birkhead.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS. — [Special.] — The growing rôle of the air world's consciousness and activity is reflected here at the Salon Aeronatique, which opened recently at the Grand palace and is attended daily by throngs of fashionables from all over the continent. This is the twelfth exhibition to be held here and is the most important air show ever staged. The thousands of daily visitors include many Americans, who are especially interested in the big red plane, Question Mark, in which Dieudonne Coste and Maurice Bellonte made their trans-Atlantic crossing. No one sees this famous machine without a thrill.

Spectators also throng the huge Blériot monoplane with its two parallel cabinets, while crowds line up for a chance to pass through the DO-8, which is a smaller plane, but is of the same type as the much discussed DO-X. French government exhibits reveal the kind of experiments now being made to make air travel safer, and are particularly interesting in view of the fact that the international congress for aerial security will convene in Paris next month.

Fairbanks Entertain.

Among the Thanksgiving entertainments was that of Mr. and Mrs. Livingston Fairbank, who gave a reception in their new apartment. It was attended almost entirely by members of the American colony as well as many musicians and composers. Everybody knows that this hostess is musical and has given concerts in Paris and London. On this occasion a cold prevented her voice from being in best form. At the moment she is working hard with the idea of entering the talkies. Among her Thanksgiving guests were many from the embassy staff. Also Prince Henry of Reuss and his wife, who was formerly Mrs. Anson Buchard; Ganna Walska, more beautiful than ever, wearing black, and Marshall Clyde and his wife, and Fred Bate and his bride.

Among the notables from across the channel expected soon in Paris are

A Smile, a Tear as Money Goes for Orphans

Henry Porter's Guests Subscribe in a Jiffy.

By Cousin Eve.

HENRY PORTER'S dinner Tuesday night for the Illinois Children's Home and Aid society equaled two Charity balls, for the great sum of $70,620 was subscribed in a few minutes.

It will go down in Chicago history, probably, as the dinner of the smiles and tears, a program of dancing and music being followed by one of pathos and jerked heart strings.

I didn't knoow it was in Henry Porter—so much sentiment, I mean. He accounted for his gift of $10,000 as due to the gallant smile given him once by a tiny little yellow haired chap in an Evanston institution, and his voice broke at the recollection.

As for Judge Mary Bartelme, that bright star in our Chicago banner, her souvenirs covering years, months, days, and hours of the struggles of parents and children for bare existence, as staged in her courts—are too poignant. But one story in particular drew many a thousand dollar checks."

A True Story.

A small girl of 5 in an institution had a little pile of Christmas presents in front of a tree, and was brooding over them when a visitor passed. She asked the little thing which present she liked best.

The child drew out a small photograph of a woman whom she had never seen, who had sent her gifts for a year or two. "This," she said.

"It was the only face," said Judge Bartelme, "that this poor little creature had ever known to show her any special human kindness in all her life, and as she clasped the cardboard, tears rolled down her little wan cheeks.

This dinner, needless to say, was distinguished by good taste, elegance, and the simplicity suitable to a charitable occasion. Mrs. Waller Borden has worked for over a fortnight on details, assisted by a wonderful committee, and every guest went because he or she wanted to give generously.

The women wore black mostly; Mrs. Borden, black velvet with a girdle of turquoises; Mrs. Baur, a black beaded gown of many trains; Mrs. Rockefeller McCormick, a black and gold lamé; Mrs. Kranz Baldwin, a tight directoire slip of green satin with a broad belt of rose, tres chic.

Dancing and Music.

The host dined his guests in the front living room, at four long tables on which were high silver standards filled with all colors and shapes of chrysanthemums. In the adjoining music room between courses, Ines de Soriano, daughter of the Marquis d'Ivanrey of Madrid, and the former Italia Blair, daughter of the late Chauncey J. Blair, now Marquesa d'Ivanrey, danced Spanish dances. Clad in a black and white polka dotted frock, with a bull fighter's hat and cape of red gauze which she flaunted at an imaginary bull, she was much applauded, as was the singing of Ada Mitchell, a gifted colored artist. After the subscriptions had been counted and tears had given way to smiles, the great artist, Vanni-Marcoux, came in from the Opera with Madame and sang a most delightful program of thanksgiving—and the party was over. This was part of Mr. Insull's beneficence.

Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey McCormick matched Mr. Porter's gift, and Cyrus McCormick was another liberal giver, although the amounts were not announced individually.

Harrises Entertain for Princess.

Mr. and Mrs. Hayden Harris had a delightful informal and gay supper dance last night in honor of a visitor from Paris, Princess Eugene Kotchubey. The party was held at the Cedar street duplex apartment occupied by the Harris family, which has a two storied living room, lending itself well to picturesque entertaining with balconies draped in ancient brocades, general amplitude and charm.

The dance, making a distinct bow to the current hard times, called for headdresses, and here was economy at once, no bothersome costume. Not everybody is as sagacious as the Chicago girl at Southampton this summer, who took the first prize at a fiction ball. She wore her favorite evening gown and carried and chewed much gum. She represented Edith Wharton's "Custom of the Country."

Mr. and Mrs. Harris, having lived in Paris and other climes, are cosmopolitan in their tastes and friendships, and not a few titled persons and opera stars mingled with the local gentry at the party.

Incidentally, Mrs. Harris ranks among the greatly admired women in society—tall and slim, she has the head of a Greuze and natural charm of Manner.

An Exotic Room.

I always react to the enchanting dining room of this establishment, which is a triumph of the exotic and results from a South American tour by the head of the family. Somewhere in the tropics he saw great, gorgeous butterflies, in many sizes and many colors, but principally in blues, sapphire, turquoise, sky, and ultramarine.

How these hundreds of creatures with jeweled wings were got to Chicago and affixed to silver walls where they fly in everlasting beauty is altogether too material a process for us even to consider.

The furniture of the room is all gray and the accessories are simple and subordinate to the main theme. Princess Kotchubey is a sister-in-law of Prince and Princess Serge Kotchubey and friends of many Chicagoans, and also of another princess of that name, known to the fashionable world as Mary Nowitsky, maker of super-pajamas. Prince Victor Kotchubey, an uncle of this family, was grand master of the court of Nicholas II. and social arbiter of Russian society. His nieces and nephews all have successful shops in Paris and one of them is night watchman of a great Paris store, always very elegant in appearance and manner.

One must certainly hand to the News of Chicago Society

Russians the palm for "carrying on" in the face of tremendous odds, and these young aristocrats, coming here find jobs, make friends and become a part of our life with cheerful faces.

Hostess to Russian Group.

The other night Mrs. Barrett Wendell Jr. went to the opera with her daughter, Barbara, and a Russian group of Rotislava, Cantácuzenes and Galitzines, all high bred, charming people and good to look at. Apropos of Russians, Madame Lazareff, the mother of one of our most popular beaux, Michel Lazareff, has just returned to her home in Nice after six months in this country. She has another son in Hollywood, and owing to the number of friends of "Miche," her stay in Chicago was a round of parties and pleasure, like the days of a débutante. The Potter Palmers, Harold F. McCormick, the Wendells, the Lewises, the Gillettes and many more entertained for her constantly.

I found Madame Lazareff very amusing and original, for she is a Russian of the old régime, very Slavic in appearance, and she has seen and lived through many of the glories and grandeurs of this world, gone never to return. But among the chief delights I had in her society was when she announced herself the aunt of Prince Felix Youssopoff, the elegant young man who accomplished the proceedings which led to the death of Rasputin, the notorious monk, in the Youssopoff palace at Petersburg, now Leningrad.

Bradleys Off to Africa.

Many writers of the past and present have said that nearly all humans look like animals, and I have always privately thought that Mary Hastings Bradley was like a young lioness, with her wide-awake, fearless eyes and tawny mane. And now that she and her distinguished lawyer husband, Herbert Bradley, are about to set forth for the third time upon the jungle trail in a few days, they are joyously walking on air at the prospect of returning to their beloved Africa.

Many of us would welcome, just here, six months of oblivion in the dark continent, if only we could escape these endless discussions of hard times and what caused them. The Bradleys' hospitable apartment on Hyde Park boulevard, with its many unique trophies of elephant, gorilla, and tiger hunts, its delightful library, scene of many a gala dinner for explorers, hunters, and writing women and men of note, will be closed until June.

Soon the Bradleys, with their lovely child, Alice, and the fourth member of their party, Dr. Harry Bigelow, the celebrated legal authority of Chicago university, will be trekking along the equator, with a long, long trail behind them of some two hundred black porters.

They sail on Christmas eve, and the only cloud on the horizon, and that no bigger than a Frenchman's hand, is that yards of French red tape will delay their expedition's departure from France with supplies, ammunition, and guns to last their safari for six months. Ambassadors must intercede, and so forth.

Marketing for the Party.

Mrs. Bradley speaks calmly of her marketing for the party. One item is rice, carried by nine men, and bananas beyond computation. Furniture is taken, chairs, cots, dining table, linen, and madame's electric iron. There is also a library consisting of one book, a weighty volume of tropical diseases of Africa, which the Bradleys scan industriously when any of the blacks seem to be afflicted.

The great problem, though, is protection from the equatorial sun, which strikes down in cold gray days and even under cover. The head must be constantly protected, either with the cork lined helmet or the double perforated felt which the noted writer wears on her own bright hair. Their clothing is hunting khaki.

The explorers debark at Ualla, on the west coast, traverse the Kammerroons, Congo, Uganda, and several other smaller states, finally emerging at Kenya colony in British East Africa.

Farewell parties are beginning daily and nightly for the travelers, and who doesn't wish our intrepid friends the best of luck and happy days?

Mrs. Bryan Lathrop Returns.

Among the well known hostesses of other years who have returned to their native land are Mrs. Bryan Lathrop, who is at the Lake Shore Drive, a stone's throw from her former home, the handsome red brick colonial house which is now the seat of the Fortnightly club in Bellevue place. Mrs. Lathrop winters in Italy, where she has a lovely villa at Fiesole in the heights above Florence, and entertains a world of charming, leisurely people, including some royalties who have stepped off their thrones.

Mrs. Lathrop's brother, Arthur Aldis, and his family continue to abide in Chicago, a fact which causes her yearly to leave Washington, where she has a house and many friends, to spend the holidays here. Mrs. Francis Junkin is another to leave Washington and return, and she now is settled in the Drake tower with a grand piano or two and a superb view of the towers and minarets and frosty skyline of Chicago.

A Brilliant Pianist.

Some years ago Mrs. Junkin was Mrs. Richard T. Crane Sr. and, as the wife of the wealthy ironmaster, dispensed much hospitality here and at Lake Geneva. She is a brilliant pianist, and once a year, at least, her friends were bidden to hear some renowned pianist, when some of the numbers of the program would include the hostess in duos. Mrs. Junkin was Emily Hutchinson, member of an old south side family, which includes Mrs. Martin Ryerson, the late Charles Hutchinson, and J. William Hutchinson.

And so they all come back! Another to look us up is a very attractive member of the Coleman family, the former wife of Joseph T. Coleman Jr., Mrs. Ruth Shaw-Kennedy, who has two children and means to live permanently and bring them up in the town where her late father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Shaw-Kennedy, figured with so much distinction. Mrs. Shaw-Kennedy was a Cummings, a sister of D. Mark Cummings, so that Mrs. Coleman is a first cousin of Edith Cummings, one of our outstanding young women in the world of society and sports, and Dexter Cummings.

A Charming Tea.

I was very glad to have happened in at the Arts club tea for Margarett Sargent for many reasons, principally because it was full of interesting people, including the Walter Brewsters [Mr. Brewster being grandissimo patron of Modern Art], just home from Paris.

Mrs. Potter Palmer, who has taken the club chairmanship of the entertainment committee, was present with a bevy of young marrieds who poured tea—Mrs. Badger, Mrs. Winterbotham Jr., Mrs. MacVeagh, Mrs. John Borden, and others. The tea table was a long one clad in vivid green, with two large vases bearing great bouquets of the freshest, whitest flowers that ever graced a funeral. Personally, I love white flowers and merely remark upon this decor, as it is the highest chic for the moment and represents new art, as pink or red would never, never do.

Mrs. Brewster, in an ensemble of dove gray, was like a breath of French spring with vivid turquoise earrings; also notable were Mrs. Hugh McBirney and Mrs. Morse Ely, both enwrapped in sable coats, ample and luxurious, like a breath of Russian winter.

An outstanding event of the coming week takes place Tuesday afternoon at the Casino, when Mrs. William Yager, gives a linen shower tea for Passavant hospital. The list of invited includes the entire social roster, and the hostess, in reply to questions of what is expected, says that any gifts of linen are acceptable.

The list of women receiving with Mrs. Yager and officiating at the tables is long, and is headed by Mrs. Joseph Coleman, president of the woman's board, and Mrs. Rockefeller McCormick.

the Marchioness of Londonerry and her son, Viscount Castlereagh, who are to be the guests of Mrs. James Corrigan for the next fortnight. Lady Curzon is coming later and several entertainments have been arranged in her honor. The career of her late husband, Lord Curzon, is to be recalled by the recent memorial to him at Westminster abbey and the intention to put up a statue of him next year near the London residence.

He is particularly interesting to our countrymen because of the fact that both his wives were Americans. It is to be remembered that just before leaving for the east, when he became Indian viceroy, he found time to reach an understanding in Paris and become engaged to the brilliant and beautiful Mary Leiter. Her death in 1906, shortly after, forced his return from India, where his ambitious designs had aroused too much misgiving in Downing street, and almost wrecked him.

Young Chicagoans here at the moment are Lucy Miller, daughter of the Thomas Millers, with her friend, Janet Wallace. They will be here until after Christmas and will then go to Italy, Spain, and to North Africa. Charles E. Anderson and his wife, who had an apartment here last year, are sailing for home on the liner Lafayette, Dec. 10. Mrs. Arthur Acton, formerly Hortense Mitchell, has just returned to her Florence villa and will join her husband and sons after a visit here for several weeks.

Seek Cause for Men's Absence from Church

Conference to Seek for Balanced Attendance.

By the Rev. John Evans.

WHAT effect results from the fact that more than 3,000,000 more women are on membership rolls of Protestant churches in America than men? This question was raised by the Rev. Dr. William F. Weir, head of the national men's work of the Presbyterian church in the U. S. A., with headquarters in the Chicago temple. Dr. Weir's research work in church records revealed the numerical difference.

DR. WILLIAM F. WEIR.

The Presbyterian leader points that lopsided parish programs generally prevail in individual congregations. He charged that parish activities have become effeminized and cited the going concerns run by women, such as ladies' aid societies, missionary unions, auxiliaries, and guilds in contrast with men's organizations which usually eke out a reluctant existence under a "shot in the arm" pastoral technique.

Outnumber Men.

"Men sometimes complain of effeminized sermons by their pastors," said Dr. Weir. "But when the average minister realizes that women will outnumber men, three to one, in his Sunday congregations, the weight of that preponderance is bound to influence his preaching if he sincerely is trying to fit his sermons to his congregations."

Dr. Weir announced that 1,000 representatives from twenty-two denominations will meet in a national men's congress at Cincinnati Dec. 11 and 12 to attempt an answer to the question raised by the lack of balance between men and women in church membership. The congress will be held under the chairmanship of the Rev. Dr. Bert M. Smith of Chicago, a nationally known Methodist men's leader. According to Dr. Weir, a new interest in religious work is now being shown by men throughout the country. He referred to a recent open letter written by Angus S. Hibbard, an active lay worker, which appealed to churches to give more opportunity for religious expression among men.

Will Vitalize Religion.

"The church gets in men's work just what it goes after," Dr. Weir asserted. "The Cincinnati congress has been called with the definite purpose to answer such appeals as are being made by many men like Mr. Hibbard. The congress shall seek to make men see the place of the church in the modern world and to evaluate and vitalize religious movements among men."

Dr. Weir declared the congress program has been designed to avoid the fate of many religious conventions. This fate, he said, was that often they assemble, hear a few "great" speeches, pass some resolutions, and disband. The congress, he said, would be made up of six commissions under such leadership as will assure conclusions which will underlie new national and localized religious enterprise in men's work.

Relationship of churches to political, economic, and international subjects will be studied. Governor Elect Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania, noted dry leader, has been announced as one of the speakers who will deal with this subject.

Bible Sunday Observed by Churches Today

TODAY has been set aside by practically all Protestant churches as Universal Bible Sunday. Gov. Emmerson has addressed an open letter to church leaders urging churches to recognize the day. The American Bible society, an organization which issues 11,000,000 copies of Bibles and Testaments each year to peoples of 200 languages, has been sponsoring Bible Sunday for more than a generation.

Gov. Emmerson's Bible Sunday letter says: "Without question, the Bible has been the greatest influence for good in the lives of men and women of today. It has always been the vanguard of civilization, the torch of light that has penetrated the darkness of heathenism in the far corners of the world. It has exerted a tremendous influence upon the destinies of nations and is the comfort of the strong as well as the weak. I deem it a privilege to indorse the annual observance of Universal Bible Sunday."

Bible Sunday falls on the second Sunday in Advent in several churches that observe the entire liturgical or church year. In the Episcopal church the prayer or "collect for the day" petitions for a spirit toward the teachings of the Bible "that we may in such wise hear them, read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest them" that the teachings may be realized in people's lives.

CALONITE

The Wonderful Skin Cleanser Now in Liquid Form

The wonderful discovery "Calonite" that thousands of women have been using for years to cleanse the pores of the skin of dust, dirt and make-up that has accumulated during the day, has now been put into liquid form so it can be used on the scalp.

The fatty accumulations that form on the scalp with the dust and dirt cause that most undesirable scalp trouble called dandruff. No need to suffer any more, liquid Calonite rubbed into the scalp thoroughly, then washed off with water will dissolve away every particle of dandruff, leave the pores of the scalp so they can breathe and perform their functions. This puts new life into dull, faded, lifeless hair.

Get a little liquid Calonite from your druggist, try it and notice the results.

Brilliant Exhibits Open Here

By Eleanor Jewett.

IT is not often that an artist plays as neatly into a critic's hands as Tud Kempf did in last Monday's mail. On Sunday there appeared the following paragraph concerning his carvings, which are on view in the Diana Court Studio gallery:

"Tud Kempf shows a number of whimsical, clever pieces. His fingers are endowed with a marvelous power whenever even the most prosaic things come within their reach. For example, who would imagine the bone of a cow could ever be anything but a cow bone? Tud Kempf has wrought from just such a bone a most bewitching elephant. Out of a common beach stone he has cut with a jackknife the head of a Mona Lisa. From wood he has made an ostrich, a goldfish sucking at the sand with a ridiculous round mouth for food, a squirrel looking out of a tree, which is really a massive candlestick in disguise; a flying fish—indeed, there is hardly an end to the fantastic and lovely creatures his imagination has read into, and his fingers have won out of, wood."

Tud Kempf's reaction to this enthusiasm was extremely simple. He wrote: "Dear Miss Jewett: Any one so narrow-minded as you ought to quit posing as an art critic." Then, to rub salt into the wound, he inclosed a message from our esteemed afternoon contemporary which reads: "The powerful and ingenuous wood carvings by ——" Signed, Tud Kempf.

Of course, there may be something in the ingenuous artist's mind which we have not fathomed, but we shrewdly suspect that he failed to find our notice of his exhibit last Sunday in this column. Thence the wormwood and gall he would fain have us drink.

Vigor, Life, and Reality.

Aside from such interruptions from the mail bag, the past week has been a cheerful affair. The Arts club brought to our notice a singularly refreshing page of modernism from the portfolio of Margarett Sargent. Her paintings are devoid of malice, and yet she plays with tools that the most frostbitten caricaturist might envy. She has an uncanny power of reading a personality and of chronicling it. Her paintings possess vigor and life and reality. A magnificent feeling for color is accented again and again. Her exhibition, which closed yesterday, was a real event of the winter.

The Palette and Chisel club continues to hold full honors in the field of little pictures. The annual small sketch show is this year extremely good in every particular. Leo Marzolo offers three paintings of spring greenery which are exquisite. Oscar Gross shows his sketch for the larger painting of two children that hangs in the current exhibit at the Chicago galleries. Both gain by his generosity with this picture. Arnold E. Turtle, whose one man show has just closed in the club, is seen again in three landscapes, the choicest of which is undoubtedly the beautifully handled little study in grays, "Misty Morning."

The exhibition is everything a small sketch show should be. It has variety, color, beauty, and charm. There are pictures for all tastes. It differs from most of our shows, inasmuch as it is a "bidding" show and the highest price bid will capture the picture. The club has followed this method for a number of years, and each year the public has responded generously. With a record exhibition on the walls, the record in the auction this year should break all previous ones for sales.

Decorative and Vital.

The Chicago Galleries association opened last Wednesday a brilliant exhibit of paintings. The association may have had a finer in the course of its career, but it is difficult to place it. This is a remarkably good show. Painters in whom we have put confidence for years again prove that confidence not misplaced. If hyperbole were allowed, adjectives to match the various paintings would all be in the superlative.

The first impression that gains your attention is the decorative quality of the paintings shown. Next in importance is their vitality. There is little dead wood to be cut out. Some of the artists—Josephine L. Reichmann and Frederic Tellander, Joseph Allworthy and Wilbur G. Adam spring to mind—have outdistanced themselves. "The Begonia," by Mrs. Reichmann, is the finest piece of modernist painting that I can remember having seen from her brush. Frequently her modernist efforts have been tight and prim and forced. In the present painting the manner flows unconsciously into the beauty of the meaning. These flowers in their not unusual setting are extraordinarily real. There is depth to the picture, and conviction.

Frederic Tellander has been full of surprises the last several years. He surprises us anew in the present exhibit. His "Fountain—Place de l'Observatoire" is a glittering, dancing, fantastic, and living thing. It teases and tantalizes and charms. The "Rue Royale from Porch of the Madeleine" is soberer painting, but equally vital and vitalizing. From these to the portrait of a girl in a red dress, "Ruth," by Wilbur G. Adam, is but a step. Here again we are stopped by surprise. This is a beautifully handled portrait and exquisite in its least details.

Joseph Allworthy offers another delicately resonant still life and, changing his approach and manner, a rather impressionistic study of an Italian peasant which ranks with the other more careful paintings in the room in interest. Mr. Allworthy is a young man; he is worth watching.

"PLANTATION NEGRO," by John Goossens, in the All-Illinois Society of the Fine Arts' fifth annual exhibition of the work of Illinois artists, now to be seen on the third floor of the Stevens hotel. John Goossens is a member of the composing room staff of The Chicago Tribune. He is an American of Belgian descent and a painter by inclination. He has studied in Antwerp and in the Chicago Art institute and has done some very fine work. He has shown in a number of exhibitions. This "Plantation Negro" is unlike his usual painting, as he prefers flower and landscape subjects in the ordinary run, but it is a powerful head. The exhibit will continue to Dec. 20.

Week Sees End of Many Parties at Newport

NEWPORT, R. I.—There were many parties that broke up at the beginning of this week, thus bringing to an end the season of entertaining here. A few of the colony will be in residence at Christmas, but for the most part the notables have closed their homes and gone to town to prepare for the winter season in the south and abroad.

One of the largest parties was that which marked the closing of the Moorings, the home of Princess Miguel de Braganza. Her guests included Mrs. Beverly Bogert, Lesley Bogert, and Mrs. Tiffany Saportas.

Mrs. I. Townsend Burden has returned to New York, as have Count and Countess Alfonso P. Villa, Mr. and Mrs. R. Horace Gallatin, and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph K. I. Van Pelt.

Mrs. Herbert Shipman and her father, Edson Bradley, have gone to New York, as has Mrs. Frederick Mitchell Gould, who is to visit Mrs. Lilla Brokaw Dugmore there.

Notables Pay Visit to Carolina Resort

AIKEN, S. C.—While it is early for the winter colony to be in great force, many notable visitors have been here during the week. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. Marion Wyeth of Palm Beach, who came to visit their daughter, Florence, who is at Permata school. They left early in the week to open their home in Florida.

Others who were here this week included Mr. and Mrs. Elton Parks, Mrs. Marshall Potter, Lisa Potter, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred L. Ferguson, and Mrs. M. S. West.

Will you contribute one hour to Beauty?

If you are not looking your loveliest for the rigorous round of engagements before you — or if you are fatigued at the end of a crowded day . . . will you let us demonstrate what a brief hour's individualized beauty treatment can do?

Perhaps it is a matter of sallow skin, of telltale crow's-feet around your eyes . . . or a coiffure unbecomingly arranged . . . or aching tired feet which reflect fatigue in your face . . . or details of body symmetry which make you look less lovely than you really are.

You will find these famous beauty treatments conservatively priced. Personality Makeup at $2. Corrective Face treatments for as little as $3.50. Expert Body treatments at $5. (Combination treatments and courses ranging from $10 to $100 adapted to your individual requirements.)

Regardless of where you buy your beauty preparations, come to the Salon for counsel and advice.

Footnotes.

Mrs. Augustus N. Eddy was a sister of Mrs. Marshall Field. The Eddy home was at the corner of Michigan avenue and 16th street.

Mrs. Sidney Starbuck sends us a serenade said to have been much used in a New York town in the late '70s when gallants gathered beneath the windows of a favored lady's house and sang to her:

"We come, our tuneful chorus blending,
With joy to greet our friends [illegible]
And cheer with song each [illegible] moment
That speeds on airy pinions bright.

"'Tis music wakes our purest [illegible]
And brightens all our paths [illegible]
The choral strains the first to [illegible] us
In yonder worlds to which we go."

This song was always followed by "Good Night, Ladies."

If you have a song your [illegible] sang or a verse you think appropriate to this column, please send it to Herma Clark, care SUNDAY TRIBUNE, Chicago. And don't forget that [illegible] Martha's school isn't yet [illegible]. Where shall she be sent?

Here's an Opportunity
You Can't Afford to Pass Up
Any one who wants to learn another language will welcome this opportunity to test a Method which has made real linguists of 150,000 men and women. Now you too can learn any modern language in a short time. And to prove it—to show you how amazingly simple and fascinating we have made the study of languages we offer you a demonstration lesson AT OUR EXPENSE. The features that have made this Method the talk of linguists everywhere must be actually tested in a demonstration lesson. That's why—if you intend to learn another language—you can't afford to ignore this invitation. We don't ask you to enroll. But we do ask you to see for yourself why the Berlitz Method is the only Method that develops REAL linguists. You have your choice of languages—French, Spanish, German, Italian, or English. Why not 'phone Harrison 0392 for an appointment now!

We have on hand at this time a very unusual selection of Rolls-Royce in various body types at substantial price reductions. Time payments arranged without additional charge.
